INTRODUCTION

The Source of the Wills. The following transcripts of Wills relating mainly, though not exclusively, to the county of Oxford have been made from the series of Registers of Wills, dating from the year 1383, proved in the 'Prerogative Court' of Canterbury. These registers, which eventually grew to over 2,000 in number, have been preserved in the Principal Probate Registry at Somerset House since 1858, when they were transferred thither from Doctors Commons after the abolition of the probate jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in the preceding year. To Doctors Commons, in Paternoster Row, the registers had been moved, possibly in the time of Elizabeth I, but more probably after the Great Fire of London in 1666, from their first home, the archives of Lambeth Palace.

The wills thus preserved are not original documents but registered copies made by clerks of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury at the time of probate and as an essential part of its procedure. The original wills, often enough mere scraps of paper, were doubtless returned to the executors, and very few could have survived. No original will is to be found in any of the registers before 1484; and it is safe to conclude that none of the present transcripts has been made from an original will in this sense. It is likely enough, indeed, that many, perhaps very many, of the originals were nuncupative wills, that is, declared orally by the testator, taken down by a witness, and so reach us at second hand. It is no mere matter of form when William Leynthele, lord of Lachford, concludes his will (1495) with the words, 'In witness that this is my will I have subscribed my name with myne owne hand that wratt all this my will and testament' (p. 53). By this date, 1495, the use of English in wills was rapidly growing. The Fifty Earliest English Wills, printed by the Early English Text Society, cover the period 1387 to 1439. In the present small collection the earliest will in English, that of John Goldwell, a London mercer, from Bloxham, is dated 1466; by the end of the century there are 15 more wills in English here; by 1510 another 33. Soon after this date the use of Latin in the registers becomes exceptional.

These details have their bearing on the treatment of wills of this period as records. It is a question not so much of accuracy—in proper names, for instance—as of interpretation. The Lambeth scribes were not drafting, but copying—from a mixed assortment of originals—and filing. In the process, names of persons and places naturally enough took varying forms. In the first will here, that of William de Horbury, sometime of Eyesham abbey, one of the testator's executors, Nicholas Bubworth, may be recognised as Nicholas Bubwith, at the time (1393) a fellow clerk with the testator in the royal chancery, and in due course bishop of London, of Salisbury, treasurer of England, and finally bishop of Bath and Wells (1407-24), where he built one of the towers of the west front, the library over the cloister, and a chantry for himself in the nave. Or again, 'Royall Lyen' from where Dame Kateryn Harecourt dates her will (1488), which might be interpreted King's Lynn, is a mis-spelling in the register for Royall Lyeu, i.e. Rewley abbey, where she wished to be buried (p. 40). But what can be made of surnames such as Gyressh, Sygur, Raunhoh, Kyrchalgh, Litcock, and many more such eccentricities?

The Archbishop's Prerogative in Probate. The testamentary jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in England was in operation in varying degrees of scope and effectiveness from at least early in the thirteenth century until the establishment of the Court of Probate in 1857. In the period of their greatest independence and activity, from the time of Edward III to that of Henry VIII, these courts exercised an exclusive jurisdiction in the sphere of probate and all that it comprised wider than that possessed by any other ecclesiastical courts in Europe. We are here concerned with the prerogative exercise of that jurisdiction claimed by the Archbishop of Canterbury over all other ecclesiastical authority within the province. The claim, put briefly, was as follows: where persons dying testate or intestate possessed notable goods (bona notabilia) in more than one diocese of the province, the proving of their testaments, the approval or appointment of executors and administrators, and the audit of the final accounts of the latter belonged solely to the Archbishop by prerogative of the Church of Canterbury. The claim when first heard of in the thirteenth century was challenged by certain diocesan bishops who claimed similar powers within their dioceses, but, after being energetically asserted by primates like Pecham and Winchelsey, the prerogative claim was effectively vindicated and appears to have been in general operation from the middle of the fourteenth century. It depended, however, on individual archbishops how far they took an active personal part in the business of probate. Their practice from the first appears to have been to delegate routine business to one of their chief officials, as well as to give to others special ad hoc commissions to prove particular testaments. As business grew in volume and profit, more permanent delegations came to be given, resulting in the concurrent exercise of prerogative probate by the archbishops in person and their 'commissaries-general' for this purpose.

Beginning, it seems, under Archbishop Islip (1349-66) this dual control fluctuated under his immediate successors, and reached the zenith of its activity under Archbishops Chichele and Stafford (1414-52). Thereafter the archbishops appear to have taken a diminishing share in probate practice, until under Archbishop Morton (1480-1500) we find the commissary-general with a 'court of the prerogative' eventually taking over the whole of the business.

To return to the Registers of wills, it should be noted that since the time of Archbishop Courtenay (1381-96) two series of prerogative registers had been kept, both apparently at Lambeth—one, of wills proved coram domino and entered in the archbishops' provincial registers; the other, of wills proved before the commissary-general. It is from the latter series, the fortunes of which have been referred to, that the present collection of wills is drawn. Morton's register is the last of the archbishops' series to contain wills, and it seems certain that from his time the phrase Probatum coram domino apud Lamehith becomes purely formal, signifying the authority without implying the presence of the archbishop. From such evidence as is furnished by these Oxfordshire wills, this change of practice occurred about the year 1494. In this connexion a further apparent change requires notice. The possession by the testator of bona notabilia in more than one diocese of the province seems by the end of our period to have become a wholly fictitious qualification for the intervention of prerogative authority. A glance at the wills, among many others, of Robert Ardern (1493), Robert Calcott (1498), Thomas Fleisher (1501), Agnes Garnond (1504), Peter Barton (1505), or Richard Glaseor (1508), none of whom leaves more than 4d. to the mother church of the diocese, reveals nothing to claim the attention of the archbishop—unless, indeed, Cardinal Morton's apparitors and their successors had learned something of the inquisitorial methods traditionally associated with his name. However that may be, the whole procedure of probate (of which Professor E. F. Jacob in his edition of Archbishop Chichele's Register, has given a most illuminating account), whether conducted by the archbishop in person 'in his manor of Lamehith' or on visitation, or by his commissary-general, was undeniably efficient; although detailed, it was well-regulated, and could be unbelievably rapid in action. We do not here know the date of death of any testator, but if the Index of Testators be referred to it will be seen that in twenty or more instances probate was granted within a month, and occasionally within a week, of the dating of the will—a fact from which more than one inference may be drawn.

'The Last Will and Testament.' The seemingly redundant phraseology of the solicitor's office of today finds its explanation in the will of almost any medieval possessor of landed property. In the period covered by the wills printed here the distinction between testamentum and ultima voluntas was fundamental, and calls for some notice here, however brief. The Testament was the only instrument of bequest recognised at common law, and, strictly, the testament applied only to moveable goods and chattels. Further, the testament derived its validity from the naming and appointment in it of the executor. Such appointment, in the words of Henry Swinburne, the sixteenth-century ecclesiastical lawyer, ‘is the Foundation, Substance and true formal Cause, without which a Will is no proper Testament.’ Moreover, if the executors named in it jointly and severally refused to act, the testament was rendered invalid, the deceased person was declared intestate, and an administrator had accordingly to be appointed.

As for the Last Will: at common law, in this period, landed property was not deaisible by will. It was subject to the rules of feudal tenure and of inheritance, and the prohibition was made partly in the interest of the testator’s overlord and partly in that of his expectant heir. By means, however, of the Use, an institution which by the fifteenth century was coming into almost universal application, a testator could evade the prohibition of wills of land, and in an appendix (ultima voluntas) to his testament could dispose of his lands in almost any manner he pleased. The usual course was for the testator at some date prior to the making of his testament to convey his landed property by feoffment to a group of his friends to hold to his use (feoffamentum ad opus); thereby they became the legal owners (feoffees to uses), while he retained possession and continued to enjoy the profits of his estates. Subsequently, at the time of making his testament, he declared, in a so-called ultima voluntas, his wishes as to how his feoffees were to dispose of his beneficial interest in the lands. It was a collusive proceeding, but it created a form of trustee-ship which was recognised by the Chancellor and came under his protection. These ‘last wills’ were treated by the ecclesiastical judges as codicils, and proved along with the testament, and the wishes or instructions of the testator embodied in them were enforceable by the court of chancery. The testator’s disposal of his land might take a variety of forms. The most usual form was for a life-interest to be given to his widow, and thereafter an interest in perpetuity to the heir, as for example, in the wills of the Ashfeldes, of Heythrop manor, in 1455 and 1506 (pp. 19, 88), of Richard Hylle, London haberdasher, with lands in Essex, Kent, and Oxfordshire, in 1459 (p. 24), of John Barantyne, of Haseley, 1474 (pp. 32-3), of Hugh White, of Henley, 1503 (p. 82), and, most complicated settlement of all, that of Sir Edmunde Rede, of Boarstall, in 1488 (pp. 44-6). Another application of the use was the endowment of chantries out of the rents or proceeds of sale of land or tenements, for example by Thomas Mokkyng, clerk, of London, in the second ‘codicil’ 1428, to his testament (p. 15), by Thomas Beamond, salter, of London, also in a ‘codicil’ ante-dating his testament (1454, p. 21), and by Thomas Crofte, esquire, of Woodstock, in 1485 (p. 38). More than one of such testators had doubts about infraction of the mortmain legislation. ‘If it may be doo’, writes William Leythale, when making an annuity to the abbot and convent of Thame out of land which he has enfeoffed to his use (p. 53), and Thomas Mokkyng, already mentioned, will have his chantry endowment diverted to the seven works of mercy, the marriages of poor maidens, and repairs to roads, ‘if it proves illegal’ to leave land in London in mortmain.

Space does not permit fuller reference to the content of these wills, to which, it is hoped, the indexes of Place-names and Subjects will prove adequate guides. It is now familiar ground to many antiquaries, and has been fully explored by Dr. Jacob in his edition of Chichele’s Register. For an understanding of Canterbury administration, provincial and diocesan, the massive work of Dr. Irene Churchill and the more recent study of the late Brian L. Woodcock are, of course, indispensable.

The Society is greatly indebted to Dr. Alice Beardwood for her help with the text, and to the Rev. E. P. Baker for compiling the Index of Place-names.

SOME OXFORDSHIRE WILLS

A.D. 1393—1510

Note. Of the following Wills, seventy are registered in Latin, forty-nine in English, and three partly in Latin and partly in English. The Latin wills are indicated by an asterisk against the name of the testator. These have been translated, and condensed by the omission of recurrent words and phrases—

Item, I bequeath—and the like, and of the traditional formulas describing the testator's condition, 'sick in body, but whole of mind,' and the commendation of the soul 'to God, the Blessed Virgin and all the Saints,' which preface almost every will.

The English wills are left in the original spelling, as are English words occurring in the Latin wills. In all the wills, personal names and place-names are given in the spelling as found, with the modern form added in square brackets where necessary. Places not in Oxfordshire generally have the county added in square brackets. Roman numerals have been changed to Arabic.

The wills are arranged as far as possible according to the date on which they were made. The reference at the head of each will is to the name and folio of the register in which it is entered in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury series preserved in the Principal Probate Registry (Literary Dept.), Somerset House. Each folio comprises up to a dozen leaves.

Indexes of Testators' Names, of Place-Names, and of Subject-matter will be found at the end of the following text.

(P.C.C. Rous 9.)

11 April, 1393, in the priory of St. Bartholomew, Smythfeld, in the suburbs of London. William de Horbury, clerk. To be buried in the abbey of Eynesham, co. Oxford, next Abbot Geoffrey, and I desire an honest priest to celebrate divine service there for three years after my death for the health of my soul and of my benefactors' souls. To the abbot and convent aforesaid a cup called 'le Grypesheye' with cover, and every day when they sing Letabundus in the hall after grace, all in the hall shall drink from the said cup and say De profundis with the Lord's Prayer for the soul of the said William de Horbury, clerk of the chancery of the lord the king. To the said abbot and convent of Eynesham £30 to pray for my soul and for my benefactors and all faithful departed, and 10 marks for a marble stone to be placed upon my grave in the said abbey.

All debts of Roger Chesterfeld, late parson of Ipplepen church [Devon] to be paid, a corporal oath having first been taken from his creditors as to the amount Roger owed while alive. To the church of Ipplepen a vestment of red and white checked velvet (velvet scaccatum). To Cecilia, my mother, for food and clothing £40. To John Crawshaw of Nottingham and his heirs the reversion of the manor of Wryngreworth [Wingerworth] and four messuages in Derby and Chestrefeld [Derbyshire], he to pay £20 less for the same than any other. The same John to do for me, because of the great faith I have in him, as he would wish I should do for him and to swear before God that the money coming from the aforesaid reversion be levied and collected quickly to accomplish my will and testament as quickly as possible.
The debts owing from my father, Robert, to persons at Hederisfeld and Bernesley [Yorks.] and nearby parts shall be paid. The chapel of the Blessed Mary of Bures [Suffolk] to be satisfied of all moneys received by me of the same chapel. to wit, 20s. and 26s., which a certain brother Albus, collector for the bishop of Norwich when he went to Flanders did not wish to receive because of the smallness of the amount and which he had given to the parishioners of Bures for their use.

To Thomas Raydon, my servant, 6 marks. To Margaret, the daughter of my sister, 6 marks. I will that forty pounds of wax burn around my body in the vigil and on the day of my burial. To Robert de Whytyngton a plot of meadow in the fields of Chestrefeld, which late I bought of Henry de Maunfeld and in the fee of Dronfeld [Derbyshire], and 100s. To Richard Gabriel, my clerk, to pray for my soul, 100s. To Henry Richard of Houseley 50s. To Eva Gooldkerr 6s. 8d. a year for life. To the poor at Chestrefeld £10.

Executors: Nicholas Babworth, clerk; John Crawshawe of Nottingham; John de Barley of Chestrefeld; Robert Skyrys, clerk.

Supervisors: John Kentwode, chivaler; John de Burton, clerk.

Proved (blank) 1393 by the executors.

To Henry Belle and Robert Basset, now wardens of the Fraternity and Gild of Corpus Christi in the church of All Hallows, Bredestrete, London, and to the brothers and sisters of the same all my lands, rents, and services, as follows: the land whereon Salters Hall is now built and six houses also newly built by me in the parish of All Hallows, Bredestrete, in the street and ward of Bredestrete, between the hospice called the 'George on the Hoope', late Roger Jaket's, citizen and baker of London, on the south and the church of All Hallows, Bredestrete on the north, one head abutting on Bredestrete on the west and on the tenement late William Glendale's and after of the heirs of Roger Chamber on the east; also my house called 'le Chekir' with shop, cellar, and solar in the said parish, between the tenement of the Prior and Convent of St. Bartholomew, Westsmithfield, London, on the south and my tenement called 'the White Bulle', formerly Sampson de Soham's, taverner, on the north, and extending from the Bow Tavern, now of the Priory and Convent of Dertford, on the east to Bredestrete on the west; also my newly-built tenement called 'le Brokenfeld' in the parish of St. Mary Magdalen, Milkstrete, London, in Bredestrete Ward between the tenement late of Sir Thomas Charleton, knight, and that of the Mystery of the Tailors, London, on the west and the tenement belonging to the church of St. Lawrence, Old Jewry, London, and one belonging to the church of St. Augustine by Powlislayne and that of Thomas Malton, now John Rotherham's of Enfield on the east and my tenement called 'the Cheker' on the south and Westchepe on the north, to have and to hold to the said Fraternity forever to find a chaplain to pray for my soul and the souls of my wives, my parents, and all Christian souls, in All Hallows church, in a chapel in the south of the said church built by me,

1 This is the testator's 'will concerning my lands', referred to above. It is registered at Stokton, fo. 71.
on my anniversary every year forever, the said chaplain to have 10 marks a year and the rector of the said church 20d. and every chaplain of the same church present at my obsequies 8d. and every parish clerk 20d., and for bell ringing and wax and for bread and drink to the parishioners there present at my anniversary 5s. (Enumerates the masses to be said each day in the said church.) The said Gild to receive six poor persons of my trade to dwell in the said six houses, or if none of my trade, then six of other trades, each to have 7d. weekly; Richard Beaumond, my kinsman, to have one of the six houses for life, the said Gild to give him 12d. weekly for life. All the said poor to pray for my soul and the other souls aforesaid each day in the said church for one hour before noon and for one hour after noon. The said Gild to take all the rents and profits of my said lands and tenements and to keep the same in repair and on the death of the said chaplain, another is to be appointed.

Executors: William Holt, merchant; John Stratton, junior, merchant; Thomas Gresham, haberdasher; Thomas Houghton, salter, citizens of London.

Proved 17 August, 1457 and administration committed to the executors named in the said testament (of 1457).

(P.C.C. Stotton 24,25.)

Borford, 10 November, 1457. Thomas Sende, rector of the church of Teynton. To be buried in the parish church of Borford when the time shall come. My exequies to be performed in a humble manner with one black cloth (over me), one medium taper at my head, another at my feet, and four torches at the most standing around, without any empty pomp or worldly display, the black cloth to be given afterwards to a poor, devout man or woman to clothe themselves withal and to pray for my soul, and the torches to be given to poor persons chosen by my executors, each of whom is to have 12d. for his trouble, to pray for my soul, and also a cloak with hood of stout russet cloth lined with thick blanket cloth to serve him for two or three years. After my exequies are completed, the said two tapers, as long as they shall last, shall serve at the funerals of poor persons without any payment therfor, and two of the torches, as long as they shall last, shall serve in the church of Borford and other poor parishes at the discretion of my executors, at the elevation of the Host and before It in the visitation of the sick; the other two torches in like manner to be given to the church of Teynton.

Whoever occupies my house wherein Henry Houchon dwells and one acre of meadow lying in the meadow of Teynton shall render yearly 10s.; the house wherein Robert Kydde dwells, with lands in the fields of Upton, and the house wherein I dwell shall render yearly 13s. 4d.

To the vicar of Borford and his parish priest, to pray every Sunday in the pulpit for my soul and the souls of my kindred and friends and all Christian souls, 20d. annually. To the priests and boys singing at my funeral 5s. yearly. To the poor of Borford 13s. 4d. yearly. To the churchwardens of Borford 20d. yearly for their labour. To the repair of Borford church 20d. yearly. To the rector or parish priest of Teynton 8d. yearly to pray in the pulpit on Sundays for my soul. To the repair of the church of Teynton 20d. yearly. All the requests above to be paid yearly out of the aforesaid rents, and if the tenants of the same default in payment, then the Abbot of the monastery of Brewerne.
and the vicar of Burford and the churchwardens of Burford shall enter into the said tenements and lands and sell the same and divide the proceeds into three parts, one to remain with the Abbot and Convent of Brewerne to pray for my soul; one to the fabric and repair of Burford church; and the third to be distributed among the poor of Burford to pray for my soul.

I desire Sir Walter Godbed to celebrate in the church of Burford for thirteen years, receiving yearly 8 marks to pray for my soul. To the mother church of Lincoln 20d. to the Friars Preacher of Oxford 40s. to the Minors 20s. to the Carmelites 20s. to the Augustinians 20s. Rules of the Society

I.—The Society shall be called The Oxfordshire Record Society.

II.—The objects of the Society shall be to print and distribute to subscribers such documents relating to the history of the County of Oxford as have not been previously edited; to print other material relating to the history of the County; and to endeavour to give advice and assistance to custodians of historical records for the care and preservation of such records.

III.—The Annual Subscription shall be one guinea payable in advance on the first of January. The annual subscription may be commuted for a subscription of twenty guineas. After 200 members have joined the Society an entrance fee of five shillings may be charged.

IV.—Each member of the Society, having paid his or her subscription, shall be entitled to a copy of every work produced by the Society, and to vote at the general meetings held within the period subscribed for.

V.—The Management of the Society shall be vested in a Council consisting of not less than six, nor more than twenty ordinary members, together with the President, Hon. Treasurer, Hon. Secretary and Hon. General Editor, as ex-officio members, all to be elected at the Annual General Meeting. An editorial sub-committee of the Council shall assist the Hon. General Editor. Vacancies occurring between the general meetings may be filled by the Council itself.

VI.—A General Meeting of subscribers shall be held annually in Oxford to receive the Hon. Secretary’s report of the work of the Society, and the Hon. Treasurer’s financial statement; to elect officers for the ensuing year; and to transact the business of the Society generally. Notice of any other business to be brought forward shall be given to the Hon. Secretary in the course of the preceding December. A special general meeting may be held at any time by direction of the Council, or on request of not less than ten members of the Society in writing.

VII.—The Council shall meet at least once in every year, and at such times as may be deemed necessary by itself. Three members, excluding the Hon. Treasurer, F. P. Redman, Bodleian Library, Oxford, Hon. Secretary and Hon. General Editor, shall form a quorum.
