This volume, which has been prepared by the Oxfordshire Record Society, forms No. 50 in that Society and No. 23 in the Joint Publications series published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the Historical Manuscripts Commission.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is a by-product and continuation of the work on Cuxham that was published in 1965 as A medieval Oxfordshire village. All those who helped me in that work have thereby contributed to the present book, and I can only repeat my thanks to them. I must in particular express my renewed thanks to the Warden and Fellows of Merton College for allowing me to use, and now publish, these records from their muniment room, and for depositing many of them for my use at the British Museum. I am especially grateful to Dr J. R. L. Highfield, Librarian and Archivist of the College, and to Mr J. B. Burgass, Assistant Librarian. They have gone to much trouble to make the records available to me, often at very short notice; through them it has been a great pleasure as well as a privilege to spend so much time working at Merton College. I am grateful too to the Trustees of the British Museum for special leave from my former regular employment to enable me to work on this edition. The volume has been a long time in preparation, and I am very appreciative of the forbearance both of the Council of the Oxfordshire Record Society and its General Editor, Dr J. F. A. Mason, and of the Historical Manuscripts Commission and its Secretary, Mr R. H. Ellis, in the various delays that have occurred. One very sad result of these delays is that the late Mr R. V. Lennard has not lived to see the appearance of the book; he took a keen interest in the early stages of its preparation and the finished work owes much to his friendly advice and suggestions.

In the general work on manorial accounts that is incorporated in the Introduction I have contracted many new debts of gratitude to the custodians of these records, and I should like to mention particularly the kindness of Mrs A. M. Erskine at Exeter Cathedral, of Miss B. Forder at Winchester Cathedral, of Mrs B. E. Johnston at Worcester Cathedral and of Mrs D. M. Owen at Cambridge University Library. Others too have given me valuable assistance on points of detail which I have acknowledged in the footnotes.

In my earlier book on Cuxham I denied myself the indulgence of purely domestic acknowledgments. I should now say how much I am indebted to my parents, whose support and encouragement made it possible for me to begin work on the Cuxham records, now nearly twenty years ago. And the last stages of the work on the present volume owe a very great deal to the encouragement and help of my wife; in particular, she has done much to remove obscurities and infelicities of expression from the Introduction, and for those that remain I alone am responsible.

I must add my thanks for further help received while the book has been in the hands of the publisher and printer. I am very grateful to Miss Jean Robertson (Mrs J. S. Bromley) and Mr R. E. Latham who kindly read proofs of the Word-list; they will see that I have adopted their very helpful suggestions for the amendment of certain entries. And I am most appreciative of the care and trouble taken by everyone concerned in the physical production of the book: by the officers of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, particularly its present Secretary, Dr G. R. C. Davis, Mr H. M. G. Baillie and Miss S. P. Anderson; by the staff of H.M. Stationery Office, particularly the designer responsible for the book's lay-out; and by the printers. Confronted with a text that offered many problems of presentation and typography they have succeeded in putting it into print not only as accurately as I had hoped but also far more elegantly than I had envisaged.

2. The following conventional signs have been used in the text:
Words set in italic (other than the endings of abbreviated words): marginal headings and notes ⌜ ⌝: insertions or additions in the same hand as the surrounding passage ⌜⌜ ⌝⌝: insertions or additions in a different hand from the surrounding passage 〈 〉: words cancelled in any way underlined: words underlined in the text (other than as a cancellation)
. . .: up to three words lost or illegible
. . . . .: four or more words lost or illegible
. . .^{m}: up to three words in the margin lost or illegible
. . . . .^{m}: four or more words in the margin lost or illegible
[ ]: editorial reconstructions of missing words or letters

3. The text of the documents is reproduced exactly as it stands, with spelling and capital letters unaltered, except:

(i) Words abbreviated in the manuscript have been expanded, using italic type for the added letters (or roman type in marginal headings and notes that are set basically in italic). However, italics have not been used in expanding (a) words for which there is no reasonable doubt of the full form intended, and (b) words for which the particular conventions followed in expansion are entered in the Word-list (pp. 775–803). The only proper nouns to be expanded are regular forenames and Latin common nouns or adjectives used as surnames.

(ii) Any obvious slips of the pen (but not mistakes of grammar or spelling) have been corrected, the actual reading being given in a footnote.

(iii) The following abbreviations have been used throughout:

mis.: misericordia
r.c.: reddit compotum rem.: remanencia, remanet, remanent resp.: respondet

(iv) The following abbreviations have been used in quantities and with figures, for all cases, singular or plural:

bus.: bussellus
d.: denarius
di.: dimidius
li.: libra (money)
lib.: libra (weight)
m.: marca
ob.: obolus
p.: pec
q.: quadrans
qr.: quarterium
s.: solidus

(v) No mention is made of any note, endorsement or alteration that is clearly later than 1359 except on nos 21 and 28.

(vi) Full stops have been placed at the end of sentences and after initials used in place of names, and have been removed from other places where they occur in the manuscripts. Commas have been used to mark any other sign of punctuation that occurs. Paragraph signs have been omitted.

(vii) In roman numerals M, D and C are printed throughout in capitals, l, x, v and i or j in lower-case; however, superior figures (as 'iiij^{xx}', 'ij^{C}') are printed as in the manuscript.

4. The notes on the compilation of each account roll (nos 57–85) do not specifically refer to all changes noted in the text, some of which cannot be assigned to a particular stage in the compilation. These notes make no mention of slips made by the writer at any stage and immediately corrected.

5. The following are the hands that occur on more than one of the documents printed; where the hand is not mentioned in the notes at the beginning of the text, the document is written in a hand that does not recur.

Hand i: nos 1, 6, 8. c. 1200–1243. Identified on all three as Walter Foliot, parson of Thurrock.
ii: nos 5, 9. 1227–43. Unidentified.
iii: nos 10, 11. 1227–43. Unidentified.

xix: endorsements on nos 17, 20. Late 13th cent. Unidentified.
xx: nos 107, 108. 1315–16. Unidentified.
xxi: nos 67, 68. 1317–19. Robert Molendinarius (see pp. 37–9).
xxii: nos 109, 110, 113, 114. 1321–6. Unidentified. xxiii: nos 42–48, 52 (draft), 54, 69–77, 78 (in part), 79, 81, 116–130; additions on nos 50, 115. 1327–54. Robert of Chalgrove (see pp. 39–40).
xxiv: nos 131–133. 1343–6. Unidentified. xxv: additions on nos 53, 72–79; possibly wrote no. 51. 1348–52. Unidentified.
xxvi: nos 50, 78 (in part). 1350–1. Unidentified.
xxvii: nos 52 (fair copy), 80. 1352. Unidentified.
xxviii: additions on nos 80, 81. 1352–4. Unidentified.
xxix: nos. 134, 135, 137, 138, 140–145; possibly wrote no. 139. 1352–8. Unidentified. xxx: nos. 55, 82–85. 1354–9. John Clericus (see p. 40).

INTRODUCTION

PART I: PLAN OF THE EDITION

1. CONTENTS OF THE VOLUME

Cuxham is a village in south Oxfordshire. It lies in the plain, not far from the foot of the Chiltern Hills, a mile from Watlington and twelve miles south-east of Oxford. The area of the parish is small, less than a square mile in extent, and in the middle ages it formed a single manor. In the thirteenth century this was owned successively by members of the Foliot and Chenduit families, until in 1268 it was bought by Walter de Merton, the former and future Chancellor of England. Three years later he gave it to the house of scholars at Oxford that he had founded, and Merton College has remained in possession of the manor ever since.[1] In recent times some parts of the property have passed to other hands, but Merton College is still a landowner in Cuxham.

Printed here are as many as possible of the surviving records that throw light on the life and economy of Cuxham before 1359. From that year Merton College leased the manor to tenant farmers, but until then it ran the property through its own officer on the manor, a reeve or bailiff, just as Stephen Chenduit seems to have done before he sold it to Walter de Merton.[2] No administrative documents of Cuxham survive from the time when the Foliots or the Chenduits owned the manor,[3] but the muniment room of Merton College contains a mass of records, mostly court rolls and records of account, arising from the running of the property from 1271 until 1359. The leasing of the manor then reduced to a trickle the spate of written documents produced by direct demesne farming there: the court rolls continued as before, but the detailed annual account of the reeve or bailiff, with its often elaborate supporting documents, gave way to the simple account of the farmer, sometimes covering several years and always short and relatively uninformative. Rather than present a more scattered selection of records drawn from a longer period it seemed

[2] When he sold the manor Stephen Chenduit wrote to Robert, his bailiff at Cuxham, to tell him to give possession of it to Walter de Merton (MM 779).

[3] If the arguments put forward below in Chapter 3 are accepted it is likely that none were produced, and that it was under Merton College's management that written records first played a part in the administration of Cuxham.

best to concentrate on the period before 1359 for which there is really detailed information about the village and its inhabitants. The documents printed include the first surviving lease of the manor, in 1361 (no. 21), and only one later document, the terrier of 1447–8 (no. 28); this is the first full description of the village's arable fields and it has been included because it throws so much light on the topography of the village a hundred years earlier. Otherwise nothing in the texts printed here was written after 1359; later annotations on the documents published have been ignored.[4]

Even for this limited period it would be impossible to publish in a single volume all surviving records of the manor. The terriers and lists of tenants (nos 22–27) and the records of the manorial court (nos 86–145) have been printed in full. But for the rest further selection has been necessary. All documents that give no information about the internal administration or economy of Cuxham have been excluded. Among these are (i) the charters recording the manor's conveyance first to Walter de Merton then to Merton College; (ii) the deeds of the substantial peasant estate that the Grene family, who lived at Cuxham as free tenants, built up of lands in neighbouring vills in the early fourteenth century; (iii) the entries referring to Cuxham — mostly to cash or produce received from the manor — on the annual accounts of the Warden, Sub-warden and Bursars of Merton College; (iv) tax assessments that give just a total for the vill, without details of the amounts due from the individual inhabitants.[5] Secondly, only a selection of the surviving financial records of the manor has been printed. Of these financial records the most important are the magnificent series of reeves' and bailiffs' annual accounts which, apart from a stray survivor from 1276–7 (no. 57), begin in 1288–9 and continue down to 1358–9 with gaps totalling only eleven years in all. Of these, those from 1288 to 1299 and from 1346 to 1359 have been printed in full (nos 58–66, 72–85). For the intervening period, 1299–1346, five representative accounts have been published, for 1317–18 and 1318–19 (nos 67, 68) and for 1327–8, 1328–9 and 1329–30 (nos 69–71); as the account for 1316–17 was published over a century ago by Thorold Rogers[6] this puts into print two groups of accounts, each for three consecutive years, an arrangement that seemed of more value than a selection of scattered accounts.[7] Of the subsidiary records of account in principle all those dating before 1299 and from 1346 to 1359 have been published (nos 29–40, 44–56), omitting only those chapter accounts and indentures of account that add nothing to the account rolls; also included are the only surviving works accounts from Cuxham, for 1330–1 and 1332–3 (nos 42, 43). All the financial records that have been left out of the present edition are listed in Appendix I. Their exclusion was unavoidable, as they would at least have doubled the size of the book, but information drawn from them as well as from the published texts about certain aspects of the manorial demesne is given in Appendixes II to VI, while Appendix VII summarises all references to persons mentioned by name in the unpublished financial records.

[4] The most notable omission is the series of fifteenth-century annotations on the court rolls, noting references to particular tenements; these are of some interest, but only in relation to the later, unpublished, records of the manor, and to include these and other late annotations, irrelevant to the period covered by the published documents, would serve only to increase the complications of the printed texts.

[5] These groups of records are listed in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 176–7.

[6] J. E. T. Rogers, A history of agriculture and prices in England (7 v., 1866–1902), ii, pp. 617–30.

Although many records of Cuxham before 1359 have been omitted from this edition, those printed form a substantial, even a bulky, work. To devote a book of this size to the records of one small place calls for explanation, especially when it is claimed that these texts are of significance in a national context. Such a claim rests mainly on the nature of the records, but partly too on the form of the edition.

In the first place there are relatively few manors for which medieval records survive in such number and such variety as for Cuxham. Specimens of most types of document represented here have, of course, often been printed before, but very seldom so as to bring together different sorts of record relating to the same place.[8] There still seems a genuine need to publish in a single work a substantial corpus of all types of documentary evidence from a single manor, thus demonstrating the sort of information to be looked for from each source and the relationships between them. The Cuxham records are particularly well suited to this purpose. This is partly because of the quantity and variety of those that survive, but partly too because the identity of manor, vill and parish at Cuxham means that the records of the Merton College manor are in effect the records of an entire village community.[9] The volume may thus serve as a source-book for the study of a specimen medieval village of the English midlands. To some extent the records have already been put to this use: the present editor's A medieval Oxfordshire village: Cuxham, 1240–1400 (Oxford University Press, 1965) forms an historical introduction to the records

[7] In selecting the accounts on this principle I am adopting the wise suggestion of the late Mr R. V. Lennard.

[8] The most notable printed editions that do this are Frances M. Page, The estates of Crowland Abbey (1934), and the important trilogy published by the Wiltshire Record Society: Accounts and surveys of the Wiltshire lands of Adam de Stratton, ed. M. W. Farr (vol. xiv; 1959); The rolls of Highworth Hundred, ed. Brenda Farr (vols xxi, xxii; 1966–8); Court rolls of the Wiltshire manors of Adam de Stratton, ed. R. B. Pugh (vol. xxiv; 1970).

published here,[10] but it by no means exhausts their value to the social and economic historian. There is much to be discovered about the workings of the small medieval community both from the individual case-study and from broader comparative work; it is hoped that this volume may contribute to this end, and it is with this in view that Appendixes II to VI have been planned, tabulating for the whole period information from Cuxham that seems likely to be of value in a wider context.

Secondly, in presenting a substantial range of the early records of one of Merton College's manors the volume may serve to complement Dr J. R. L. Highfield's edition of The early rolls of Merton College (Oxford Historical Society, New Series vol. xviii; 1964). Dr Highfield prints all surviving records of the internal administration of the College in the thirteenth century: some forty accounts of the Warden and other officers from 1277 to 1301. These, with Dr Highfield's illuminating introduction, give an extraordinarily full picture of the organisation of the medieval College: we see its officers in their journeyings on College affairs, collecting money from the estates and laying it out in food, clothes, books and new buildings for the Warden and Fellows. In the Cuxham records we find the same officers and the same administrative machinery at work, but we see them from another viewpoint: we see the money and produce that supported the College being acquired, not expended, and we see its officers in their rôle as landlords, keeping watch on their local reeves and bailiffs, supervising harvest and threshing, estimating stocks of corn, attending manorial courts, auditing accounts, paying out tips and bribes to their own workers, to neighbouring landlords and their officers and to royal officials. In an age when, as Dr Highfield puts it, 'The Warden was as much an estates bursar as he was the head of an academy'[11] and when the College was likely to find its Fellows' agricultural experience of as much value as their theological skill, this picture of their activities may claim to contribute to the history of both the medieval college and the medieval university. Cuxham, of course, was only one of some fifteen manors owned by Merton College at this time, most of them just as well documented, but it may reasonably serve as an example: being nearer to [10] Continuing work on the Cuxham records has brought to light some points in Med. Oxf. vil. that need correction: on p. 29 gogge was not the name of the stream at Cuxham but is a word meaning 'marsh' (OED gog[3]); on p. 107 the missing reference in n. 5 is to p. 10; on p. 119 note 4 can be deleted for (as no. 27 shows) it was I who made the clerical slip, not the anonymous writer of hand x. Of more significance is the addition of the subsidy assessment of 1327–8 (no. 150) to the known records of the village; its former description in the lists at the Public Record Office did not show that it covers Ewelme Hundred. Its evidence does not much affect the general picture: it provides a third name, John le Follere, for John le Sherman (p. 143), a new list of tenants in an order that accords well with the others (p. 172) and a new list of valuations which, compared with the others (pp. 173–4), values the goods of Robert Oldman so favourably as to suggest that he may have reaped some benefit from the College's bribe (pp. 106, 133). It is noteworthy that whereas the demesne was assessed at 14*s.* 4*d.* the amount paid was entered on the reeve's account as 16*s.* 4*d.* (no. 69 (for. exp.)). Finally, 5 bus., not 12 qr. 5 bus., of wheat was used for the assessors in 1296–7 (pp. 106–7).

Oxford than any of the other manors except Holywell it seems to have had more than its share of visits from the Warden and Fellows, and to have sent more of its produce for consumption at the College, but its organisation seems typical of the estate as a whole. The early reeves' accounts from Cuxham may be compared with those of the College's manors of Farleigh (1277–8), Malden (1270–1, 1300–1) and Leatherhead (1282–3), printed in Surrey manorial accounts, edited by Helen M. Briggs (Surrey Record Society, vol. xv; 1935), while mention must also be made here of the unpublished work of Mrs E. Lowry, 'The administration of the estates of Merton College in the fourteenth century' (1933),[12] a pioneer study of the working of a medieval estate which provides an invaluable guide to the College's administration of its properties and makes particular use of the records of Cambridge, Gamlingay (Cambs.), Cheddington (Bucks.) and Diddington (Hunts.).

Thirdly, the documents published here are intended to contribute to our knowledge of the financial aspects of manorial administration in general. The period covered by the surviving Cuxham documents is by no means an arbitrary one in this context: it corresponds to a well-marked stage in the history of estate management. It begins just when the use of written accounts was becoming widespread among estate-owners and it closes at a time when the leasing of entire manors was radically changing the nature of manorial administration and with it the forms of record that that administration produced. Part II of this Introduction discusses the composition and form of accounts and other estate records in this period and the Cuxham records serve admirably to illustrate this discussion by their variety, by their typical form and by the changes that they underwent in the course of time. With some important exceptions existing editions of manorial accounts fail to reveal significant features of their compilation and development. This is partly because few of the printed series of account rolls span a sufficiently long period, partly because subsidiary records of account either have not survived or have not been printed, but partly too because in trying to produce as simple a text as possible editors have tended to disregard such details as changes of hand, deletions, erasures and other amendments. These details can tell us as much as the texts themselves about the way these accounts were compiled and the administrative processes that produced them. In the present edition the purpose of illustrating the development of manorial accounting has influenced the method of editing as well as the selection of the records published.

This method of editing is offered as the fourth raison d'être of the present work: it is put forward as an experiment in the techniques of editing medieval record texts. In the Introduction — short, but containing much concentrated wisdom — to his Revised Medieval Latin word-list (1965), Mr R. E. Latham remarks, of Medieval Latin, that 'Of the sources available in print, few have been edited with anything like the care normally expended on Classical or even Middle English texts'.[13] This is at once a reproach and a challenge to the editors of Medieval Latin documents, and the present edition is intended as an answer to this challenge. It is dangerously easy for the historian or antiquary to assume that provided the meaning of a text is clear the writer's quirks of language, grammar and spelling are of little importance. The result can not only baffle or mislead the lexicographer; it can obscure information that is ultimately of historical as well as linguistic interest. Certainly every editor of a Medieval Latin text, faced with the usual range of equivocal letter forms and ambiguous abbreviations, has somehow to steer between the Scylla of an over-pedantic expression of every conceivable doubt in the reading, and the Charybdis of refusing to admit to any doubts at all. The present editor cannot be the first to have wondered despairingly whether the only solution compatible with sound scholarship is not to use record type to reproduce the exact abbreviations and letter forms of the original. But this solution is out of fashion, and rightly so: it is expensive, clumsy and less precise than might appear at first sight, and it merely hands on to the reader the problems of interpretation that properly rest with the editor. The method of editing adopted here is described in the next chapter. Many of the texts printed in this volume are complicated ones: they contain alterations and additions, sometimes in several different hands. It has been taken as axiomatic that any attempt to ignore or simplify these changes would destroy much of the value that the edition may have; but otherwise the aim has been to produce as straightforward and readable a text as possible. It is not claimed that a universally acceptable solution to the problems has been found, but it is put forward tentatively as one way in which they may be met.

[13] Op. cit., p. ix.

2. METHOD OF EDITING

The present volume sets out to print as nearly as possible exactly what the writers of the documents wrote, or what they would have written had they spelled out every word in full. The roman numerals and capital letters of the originals have been retained,[1] also their use of long and short j, i, round and pointed u, v; though logically indefensible it is of value to keep this distinction in print, especially in proper nouns and vernacular words, as it points clearly to cases where there may be ambiguity in the reading of n or u or in the interpretation of a series of minim-strokes.[2] Some changes have, however, been made. Thus, certain common words have been abbreviated to a standard form; these are listed on p. xvii. A full stop has been placed at the end of each sentence whether or not there is one in the manuscript, and those occurring elsewhere in the text have not been reproduced. Exact reproduction of the full stops in the manuscripts would not only make the text unnecessarily difficult to read, but would be incompatible with the practice of expanding abbreviations; many of the writers followed an abbreviated word with a full stop to serve as an additional mark of suspension.[3] And, as in all handwritten texts, there are some details of the readings where arbitrary decisions have had to be made on points too trivial for particular note.[4] The conventions used in reproducing the texts are listed in detail on pp. xvi–xvii. What follows here is a more general description of the method of editing, with particular reference to the two principles adopted to deal with the thorniest of the problems that confront the editor of a medieval text: the expansion of the abbreviations used by the writers of the manuscripts.

[1] However, the use of capital letters in roman numerals has been normalised, so that M, D and C are always printed as capitals, l, x, v and i or j in lower case. This decision, made at an early stage in editing, was perhaps a mistaken one: it conceals ambiguities in the text, particularly since the figure one is usually written as a capital I in the manuscripts. Thus 'In expensis j garcionis' in no. 65 (visitors' exp.) should perhaps be read as 'In expensis I. garcionis', giving the initial letter of his name; likewise in no. 84 (for. exp., cash liveries, oats) references to I. clericus have been thus transcribed in view of the references to Iohannes clericus in no. 85 (cash liveries, peas), but should perhaps be j clericus.

[2] In principle I concur completely with H. Maxwell Lyte, '"U" and "V": a note on palaeography', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research ii (1924–5), pp. 63–5, but would submit that there are arguments in favour of retaining the manuscript's use of u and v in a printed edition, a practice that he finds 'neither correct nor pleasing'. I recognise though that the same arguments might equally justify retaining the distinction between long and short s in view of the risk of confusion between long s and f.

[4] Most of these cases fall into one or other of the following groups: (i) whether a concluding minim-stroke is a long j or a short i; (ii) whether a phrase like 'in autumpno' or 'in crastino' is written as one word or two; (iii) whether such abbreviations as h'nesium, cop'osa, should be expanded to ar, er or or; (iv) whether a word like tertium or unctio should be read with medial ci or ti; (v) whether a particular letter (such as s or h in hand xxiii) should be transcribed as capital or lower-case.

The first of these principles is that the editor should make clear exactly what he has done in the way of expanding these abbreviations, and that this is more important even than ensuring that they have been expanded correctly: the reader must not be misled into thinking that a certain word, spelling or grammatical construction has the authority of the manuscript behind it when it is really no more than an editorial reconstruction. Editors of medieval vernacular texts achieve this by printing in italics all letters not actually written in the manuscript, but Latin texts, especially of the sort printed here, are far more heavily abbreviated than vernacular ones, and to use italic for all expansions would be unsightly and costly and would make it almost impossible to set and check the printed text with accuracy. Nor, in Latin texts, need every abbreviation be noticed in this way, for the abbreviations used vary greatly in degree of ambiguity. A p with a loop through the descender stands as unambiguously for pro as if the word were spelled out. A p with a stroke through the descender usually stands for per, but can stand for par or even por or pur. A hook at the end of a word may stand specifically for er, or it may be a general mark of suspension like a modern apostrophe or full stop. To use italics for all these abbreviations would be to reduce them, incorrectly, to a common level of doubt. The method followed here is a compromise. In principle all parts of words not fully written out in the manuscript are printed in italics, but with two exceptions. First, where there can be no reasonable doubt that a word should be expanded in a particular way this has been done without recourse to italics; this introduces a subjective, even arbitrary, element into the process of editing, but where doubt over a particular extension would imply a perverse and otherwise unrecorded eccentricity on the part of the writer pedantry must be allowed to give way to common sense. Secondly, many recurrent words and constructions for which the proper extensions are really in doubt have been entered in the Word-list that follows Appendix VII and the conventions followed in extension have been described there; in each case it is shown what support the manuscripts provide for these conventions, how far they are simply arbitrary, and if there are any instances of contrary usage in the manuscripts these are noted. The conventions followed for individual words are covered in the first part of the Word-list; the second part deals with those adopted in extending particular grammatical constructions. By means of these two general exceptions to the rule of italicising extended portions of words, the italic type in the text has been reduced to an acceptable amount; where it occurs it very often simply reflects doubt over the number (singular or plural) of a noun or adjective or over the tense of a verb.

As a glance at the Word-list will show, the convention followed in extending a word or construction often varies with the writer of the particular document. This follows the second principle adopted: that the various hands at work in the manuscripts should be distinguished with a view, if possible, to discovering the idiosyncrasies in the grammar and spelling of each writer. In deciding how an abbreviated word should be expanded an editor has to answer three questions: (i) how can the abbreviation be extended so as to form acceptable Latin? (ii) can it be shown that the word thus extended was really used by contemporary writers? (iii) can it be shown that the word thus extended was really used by this particular writer? The earliest editors of medieval documents asked themselves the first question only. Nowadays a competent editor would be expected to ask himself the second question as well. But if we are to learn anything of the writers of medieval texts, of their training and habits of mind, and of the development of the languages they wrote, it is time that the third question was normally asked also. In many of the documents printed here, particularly in the accounts, a careful analysis of the successive stages in their composition and of the different hands at work was necessary to a proper understanding and use of the text. This analysis shows, as one might expect, that different clerks, of apparently similar background, differed in vocabulary and usage; thus one hand used the word allocancia for 'allowance', the others allocacio, two writers consistently follow a number ending in the digit one with a singular instead of a plural noun, and so on. It shows, again understandably, that a single writer's usage is not always consistent, even in a single document, and that his spelling and choice of words may change in the course of years; between 1330 and 1346 hand xxiii changed from 'Summa cum prima' to 'Summa ut supra' to express no remainder in accounts of corn and stock, and in 1349 started to abbreviate bussellum as buss' instead of bz. It shows too some general changes in usage over the period covered by the documents; an example is the increasing preference for the plural expense, firme, recepta, in place of the singular expensa, firma, receptum, from the early fourteenth century on. And it also shows that while in many ways usage had moved far from ancient Latin some of the finer points of classical grammar were still observed; hand xxiii, for instance, departed entirely from the classical rule for the gender of dies, but still correctly made names of trees feminine, as appears clearly in the cases of fagus and fraxinus.

As a guide to the usage of the clerks who wrote these documents the Word-list is intended to be an important part of the present edition. We badly need to build up a corpus of information on medieval usage, both in vocabulary and in syntax, that is based on actual manuscripts, not on editorial reconstructions.[5] For instance, because editors normally extend abbreviated words in accordance with rules of classical grammar that may or may not have been observed by the writers of medieval texts, it is impossible to tell from printed editions how far it was normal practice in the fourteenth century to follow super invariably with an accusative, as in the documents printed here. The Word-list shows one way in which editors of texts might contribute to building up such a corpus of information, and its form and arrangement have been worked out with this in mind.

The glossarial entries in the Word-list, printed in bold type, include all English words found in the documents and all unrecorded Latin words and spellings; these are entered in the exact form that occurs in the manuscript, not in a standardised nominative singular or infinitive. This has been done advisedly. We find that hand xxi consistently writes baco in the nominative singular, but baconi in the genitive; hand xii regularly declines the plural of sus as sues in the nominative but suarum, suis, in the genitive and ablative. Clearly, then, when hand xxi writes of ducks (nominative plural) as anate we cannot be sure that this implies a hitherto unrecorded nominative singular anata; the same writer may regularly have used the normal anas in this case. Where the context provides evidence of the case, number, tense, etc., of a word, this is given in the Word-list. This has been done for English words as well as Latin, for their grammatical function may have affected their form by analogy with Latin; thus, it is possible that gadys and lattys were spelled thus by hand xii because the words were being used in a position where the Latin would demand an ablative plural. In fact the glossarial entries make no distinction between English and Latin words. For one thing it is impossible to determine whether such forms as an accusative plural legges or an ablative singular coperose belong to one language or the other. For another it would be arbitrary and unhelpful to separate, for instance, the form of presantbred that ends with a suspension representing a Latin ending from the other forms of the same word that do not. In glossarial entries that are not simply straightforward variants of Latin words the definitions offered have been supported by references to dictionaries or other sources; it seems only proper to provide the evidence for these definitions, even though this is not usually done in glossaries to edited texts.

It may be argued that it is scarcely worth the trouble to examine so closely the products of rural clerks, whose Latinity (and perhaps whose English too) would be beneath the contempt of the learned men of their own time. It must be emphasised that in the present state of our knowledge it is impossible to draw a clear line between a single writer's slip of the pen or personal quirk on the one hand, and a regional, national or universal development in the writing of Latin on the other; moreover the mistaken reading or personal eccentricity of one generation may easily become the accepted usage of the next — the development of the word mesuagium is a case in point.[6] Seen in this light, the products of these clerks can teach us much about the development not only of Latin but of the vernacular tongues as well. It is the duty of an editor to provide not just a text that will convey the simple meaning of the documents, but a text that will also serve as a reliable linguistic and etymological source. The method adopted in the present volume may be condemned as too cumbersome and pedantic, or alternatively as riding roughshod over many of the difficulties it purports to resolve. In fact if it succeeds in drawing attention to problems that are so often overlooked in editing medieval texts and in stimulating others to find better solutions it will have amply fulfilled its purpose.

PART II: ACCOUNTS AND OTHER MANORIAL RECORDS

3. DEMESNE FARMING AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF MANORIAL ACCOUNTING

Of the texts in this volume some three-quarters in bulk are account rolls or subsidiary records of account, the types of record that are particularly well illustrated by the Cuxham documents. The form of the manorial account has often been described, and many examples have been printed, but the course of development of manorial accounting, the methods of drawing up the rolls and their relationship to other records have been less well explored. It may be helpful to deal with these questions at some length and to set the Cuxham accounts and the period they cover in the context of the general history of manorial accounting. To do this, something must be said first of the history of demesne farming in England.

In the middle ages, as today, landed property might be managed in either of two ways. The proprietor might appoint a local agent to run the estate on his behalf; this agent would hand over all profits, keeping only a fixed salary for himself, and would have all his expenses repaid. Alternatively the proprietor might rent the estate to a lessee; in this case the lessee would hand over each year only the amount of rent that had been fixed in advance, and would himself keep any profit or sustain any loss that might occur. Since the time of the earliest medieval records the landed proprietors of western Europe have generally favoured this latter system. It called for the least possible effort on the proprietor's part: he had to do nothing but collect the rents and renew the leases when they expired. It protected him from the risk of fraud by his local agents: provided his rents were paid it was no concern of his what happened on the spot. And although the high profits in exceptionally good years went to the lessees, the proprietor had the security of a regular income, fixed in advance, without fear of serious loss in years of poor harvests or disease among the livestock.

To this general pattern of a preference for leasing landed property there is one exception: in England for much of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries it was normal for the owners of large estates — those that were reckoned in manors rather than in acres — to keep them in their own hands and to run them through local agents. The practice is known to historians as demesne farming, an unfortunate phrase that is contradictory and confusing, since in medieval usage farm was rent and a farmer a lessee. The local agent might be one of the proprietor's villein tenants, who would be called a reeve and would get no payment for his work beyond the remission of the rents and services that he paid for his holding.

Or he might be a free tenant or a complete outsider; in this case he would be called a bailiff (or sergeant) and he would be paid an annual salary. Whether reeve or bailiff the local agent's functions were the same: he was responsible for a single administrative unit of the estate, commonly known as a manor. There he had charge of any lands that the proprietor tilled himself — the manor-farm in modern usage, the manorial demesne to the historian — ordering the other employees and the resources of the manor so as to produce the greatest possible profit for the owner; and from any tenants who held land on the manor he had to collect rents and see that any other payments and services for their holdings were duly rendered. On estates of moderate size the proprietor himself or a single official in his place would keep in touch with the local agents, supervising their work and collecting the profits. But on larger estates a more or less elaborate organisation grew up to supervise them; its form varied greatly from one estate to another and from one period to the next, but it often included an officer called an estate steward or seneschal at its head, and higher bailiffs who had oversight of not just one but a small group of manors, on each of which would be a local agent, whether bailiff or reeve.[1]

Why this system flourished in England in these two centuries is uncertain. It is sometimes said that the proprietors turned from leasing to demesne farming because the rising population and increasing shortage of land in the thirteenth century meant that very high profits could be made from the direct exploitation of manorial demesnes; this is true, and can be shown from many instances,[2] but it is an inadequate explanation, since the proprietors might just as well have taken advantage of this (for them) very favourable situation by leasing their lands at high rents. It is more likely that we should look for an explanation in a rapid rise in prices that made leases uneconomic for the landlords, since a rent that was reasonable at the beginning of a lease would be absurdly low by its end; and perhaps too in the landlords' fears that lessees might acquire hereditary and inalienable rights in the properties.[3] Both these explanations would fit the circumstances of the fifty or sixty years after 1180: prices of corn and stock doubled or trebled between 1180 and 1220, and [1] There are now quite a number of excellent studies of the administration of particular landed estates in medieval England. Those that throw especial light on organisation in the 13th century include N. Denholm-Young, Seignorial administration in England (1937), R. A. L. Smith, Canterbury Cathedral Priory (1943), Marjorie Morgan, The English lands of the abbey of Bec (1946), E. Miller, The abbey and bishopric of Ely (1951), J. A. Raftis, The estates of Ramsey Abbey (1957) and F. R. H. Du Boulay, The lordship of Canterbury (1966).

[2] Examples are gathered together by E. Miller, 'The English economy in the 13th century: implications of recent research', Past and Present xxviii (1964), pp. 23–6.

[3] These explanations are discussed by E. Miller, 'England in the 12th and 13th centuries: an economic contrast?', EconHR 2nd ser. xxiv (1971), pp. 1–14; C. G. Reed and T. L. Anderson, 'An economic explanation of English agrarian organization in the 12th and 13th centuries', EconHR 2nd ser. xxvi (1973), pp. 134–7; E. continued to rise, though less sharply, until the mid-thirteenth century, while the problem of distinguishing between hereditary properties and personal offices was still much to the fore in the 1220s. It was this period that saw the widespread adoption of demesne farming. It appears occasionally in the 1170s, but a general trend towards management through local agents seems to have started only in the mid-1180s. By the death of John it preponderated on most estates, though nearly all medium and large estates still had some manors at farm.[4]

One necessary feature of desmesne farming was the accountability of the local agents and other officers to the proprietor. For the system to work at all each of them had to be able to tell him what money had been received on his behalf, what had been spent and thus how much could be handed over to him by way of profit or how much he owed his own agent for surplus expenditure. The agent had to answer too for the proprietor's goods that were in his keeping: for each sort of corn he had to say how much had been threshed, how much of this had been used as seed, how much sold, how much used in other ways; for each sort of livestock he had to account for the number entrusted to him, say how many had died, how many had been sold, what young had been born, what had happened to the wool, the milk, the eggs and other products. Obviously on any but the smallest manors a great deal of detailed information was involved in accounting satisfactorily to the proprietor for the cash and the other items, and it is hardly surprising that the historical records most characteristic of demesne farming in medieval England are annual written accounts, nor that these documents are often long and complicated. It is these records above all that give the period of demesne farming such importance for the historian: they enable us to reconstruct the medieval agricultural practice of England in a way that is impossible for any other part of Europe, and for many places where these records survive we can learn far more about the agriculture and general local economy in this period than at any other time until the mid-nineteenth century.

But although accounting of some sort was an essential part of the system, it does not follow that demesne farming was possible only where written accounts were used; still less does it follow, as has been suggested, that demesne farming was practised in England and not elsewhere because only in England were there in use techniques of accounting that private landowners could adapt to their own needs.[5] The primary purpose of the manorial account was to establish the state of account between the proprietor and his officer: which of them was in debt to the other and by how much. This is clear from its form, which was directed unambiguously to this end. But this was something that could perfectly well be established without a written document at all; indeed, a written account might seem a quite unnecessary complication. When the proprietor or his auditors came to a manor to hear and settle the accounts, the reeve or bailiff would bring his tallies and his other vouchers and aide-mémoires and would recite what had happened since the last account, what had been received, what spent and so on; the sum could be reckoned by casting counters as at the Exchequer, by an abacus or by scribbled notes, the balance one way or the other could be paid on the spot and the account closed for the year without any formal record being made. That oral accounting of this sort occurred is no more than a guess. But unless we accept that it was for long a normal practice we shall find it hard to understand some features of early manorial accounts and even harder to explain the pattern of survival of these records from the thirteenth century.

But although written accounts may not have been a sine qua non of demesne farming, they are among the earliest records of the system that we possess. The reason why we know that nearly the whole estate of the bishop of Winchester was being run in this way as early as 1208–9 is that from this year there survives the first of the magnificent series of annual accounts for all his manors that continues in almost unbroken sequence to the end of the middle ages.[6] It is not difficult to see the advantages to the prudent estate owner in writing down and preserving the details of his local agents' accounts. First, written accounts were a useful source of precedent: the proprietor could turn to the record to counter the optimistic recollections of the reeve or bailiff over the customary allowance for a certain expenditure, the customary receipts from a particular source, and so on. Second, the accounts might serve as evidence of title, either to an entire manor or to a particular tenement entered there as paying rent; they were muniments, and this is probably why so many have survived to this day. Third, the written accounts could be used to calculate the profits from any particular manor. This last was not the original purpose of the account; its form was directed solely to establishing the state of the proprietor's account with his local agent and to use this record to calculate profit was rather like using a modern bank statement to work out someone's income — a possible exercise, but not one for which the form of the document was intended, and at times valid only if certain invisible factors were allowed for. Nevertheless it is clear that from a very early stage in their history written accounts were used to calculate manorial profits.[7] It has been shown that these calculations

[6] Winch. P. R. 1208–9, pp. xv–xvi and passim.

[7] The receipts in cash from individual manors, with valuations of the receipts in produce, were being recorded at Canterbury Cathedral Priory by 1225 (Smith, Canterbury Cathedral Priory (1943), pp. 19–20). What is probably the earliest surviving account for an individual manor, for Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester) c. 1233–4, bears a note of the year's profit (BM Add. Roll 17468); on the date of this roll see below, n. 28.

were used to decide whether demesne farming should continue on a manor or whether it should be leased,[8] and the need for information of this sort, that techniques of oral accounting could not provide, may well have been an important cause of the introduction of written accounts.[9]

The history of manorial accounting in medieval England falls into three phases of development that reflect trends in estate management. These phases can be given broad chronological limits: the first phase predominated from the beginning of the thirteenth century to about 1270, the second from about 1270 to the second half of the fourteenth century, the third from then on. But it would be a mistake to fix the phases too rigidly in time or to think of them as three periods: accounts clearly belonging to Phase 1 were still being produced long after Phase 2 had become the norm, while the change to Phase 3 took place slowly over half a century or more. Nor should the three phases be taken as more than a general pattern of development, for all sorts of exceptions and variations can be found; moreover, within each phase there was a good deal of change in forms and techniques. It is Phase 2 of manorial accounting that the Cuxham accounts all belong to and illustrate so well, and detailed features of this phase will be examined in the next two chapters. The rest of the present chapter is concerned with its broader characteristics, looking at Phase 1 to see how these characteristics developed and glancing briefly at Phase 3 to see what succeeded. But detailed descriptions of Phases 1 and 3 must be reserved for other occasions, as they would not be relevant to the records printed here.

Four characteristics distinguish the manorial accounts of Phase 2 from those of Phase 1:

1. In Phase 1 written accounts were drawn up on a very small number of estates; in Phase 2 they everywhere became normal practice.
2. Accounts belonging to Phase 1 show some diversity, even idiosyncrasy, from one estate to another; in Phase 2 there was a far closer approach to uniformity.
3. In Phase 1 the accounts were written by the central organisation of the estate, and were closely linked to other central records that were often cumbersome in their bulk and complexity; in Phase 2 the writing of the accounts was organised locally, perhaps even on local initiative, and accounting records covering the estate as a whole were reduced to the minimum.
4. In Phase 1 it was a frequent, even the normal, practice to close the account after it had been drawn up, so that no balance of cash or corn was carried forward to the next period's account; in Phase 2 it was normal to carry forward from one year's account to the next a balance of cash and of each sort of corn, often a very considerable one. Each of these characteristics will be examined in turn, and this will reveal some of the lesser features that distinguish these two phases.

There are little more than a dozen estates in all from which written manorial accounts survive from before 1250; during the next two decades their number increases rapidly, but it is only from 1270 that the floodgates are opened and they become a common record of landed property. There are reasons for supposing that this is not a result of chance survival but accurately reflects the spread of the written account among estate owners.[10] It can be well illustrated by the earliest dates before 1280 from which manorial accounts survive for places in Oxfordshire:[11] Adderbury and Witney (bishop of Winchester), 1209; Burford (honour of Gloucester), 1235; Woodstock and members (royal demesne), 1243; Launton (Westminster Abbey), 1268; Whitchurch (Isabella de Fortibus), 1270; North Osney (honour of St Valery), 1270; Benson and Watlington (honour of Wallingford), 1271; Checkendon (Adam de Stratton), 1272; Little Tew (Osney Abbey), 1274; Cuxham (Merton College), 1276; Caversfield and Stratton Audley (Bicester Priory), 1277; Islip (Westminster Abbey), 1277; Chesterton (royal custody), 1278; Ambrosden, Beckley, Willaston and Yarnton (honour of St Valery), 1279.[12] It has been suggested that the second Statute of Westminster, 1285, was responsible for the rapid spread of manorial accounting, as it offered estate owners a form of legal action against defaulting bailiffs provided their claims could be backed by the evidence of written accounts.[13] Certainly it may have encouraged the further spread of written accounts, but it did not initiate the fashion, which was already well established by 1285. This can be illustrated in a somewhat rough-and-ready way by the geographically arranged English series in the Public Record Office:[14] there are 71 places (or groups of places accounted for together) for which the earliest accounts open between the 1st and the 13th years of Edward I, 1272–85, and 80 for which they open between the 14th and the 26th years, 1285–98. But it was not just that written accounts became more common: their use spread in the second half of the thirteenth century to different types of estate. All known accounts earlier than 1250, and all later accounts that have the characteristics of Phase 1, come from very large estates, lay and ecclesiastical, apart from a very few from smaller monastic estates. Now, however, they were to be found on every type of landed estate; and by 1325 we find a written account being rendered to the owner of a single manor.[15]

[10] To give detailed arguments in support of this statement would be too long a digression here, though it is hoped to develop them in full elsewhere. Broadly they are (i) the geographical distribution of surviving manorial accounts earlier than 1250; (ii) the geographical distribution of manorial accounts characteristic of Phase 1 later than 1250; (iii) the eccentric forms of certain mid-13th-century records of account which suggest that on some estates at least written accounts were not regularly drawn up.

To say that accounts of Phase 1 differ from those of Phase 2 by being more varied in form is something of an oversimplification. From the time of the earliest written accounts the similarities between those from different estates are striking. Nearly all conform to a basic pattern: the items of cash received by the local agent are entered, with a total, then the items of cash paid, with another total, and a balance is drawn, showing the amount owed one way or the other; this is followed by the account for each sort of corn, then for each sort of live and dead stock in turn, following an order that is not invariable but is very similar from one estate to another. But within this pattern variation could occur. Where the accounts for a whole estate were entered on a single roll, this usually seems to have been Exchequer-fashion (i.e. the separate membranes of parchment were tied or sewn together at the head to form a file), with the cash, corn and stock account for one manor followed by those for the next, but on the Crowland Abbey and Bec Abbey estates Chancery-fashion rolls were used (i.e. the membranes were sewn end to end in a long roll).[16] Where separate rolls were drawn up for the accounts of individual manors these were normally sewn Chancery-fashion if one membrane was insufficient, but at Ramsey Abbey Exchequer-fashion rolls with characteristic wide-spacing of entries were the rule.[17] Accounts from a few estates, particularly those centred on Winchester, differed from other accounts in two minor but very persistent features: (i) the entry in the cash receipts of all rents due was followed immediately by entries deducting those that were unpaid for any acceptable reason, instead of crediting

The notes of various payments between 1289 and 1307 entered in his memorandum book by Henry de Bray, owner of what amounted to a single manor at Harlestone (Northants.), may well have been extracted from a series of written accounts (The estate book of Henry de Bray, ed. the local agent with these deductions by entering them as though they were cash payments; (ii) deliveries of cash from the local agent to the proprietor were not entered among the cash payments, which were totalled without them, but were entered as a separate item before the balance was struck.

By comparison the accounts of Phase 2 achieve at least a superficial uniformity. To this stage belongs what is sometimes called a 'normal' manorial account. This is an account for a single manor on a roll that is sewn Chancery-fashion if it comprises more than one membrane. It opens with a heading naming the manor and the reeve or bailiff (and sometimes the proprietor as well) and the period covered by the account, usually one year running from one Michaelmas (29 September) to the next. On the front are the cash receipts and payments, with cash balance; both are divided by subject-matter into a series of paragraphs, each with a marginal heading and a sub-total. On the dorse are first the corn then the stock accounts; each category of corn or stock has a marginal heading and two paragraphs, one of receipts, one of expenditure, with a total following each and a concluding balance. The arrangement of paragraphs on both front and dorse, though far from stereotyped, follows a more or less uniform pattern. None of the Cuxham account rolls diverges far from this description, and it fits the vast majority of surviving manorial accounts of Phase 2, which are to be numbered in thousands rather than in hundreds. Within this framework there was still room for a great deal of variation in detail,[18] as well as in elaboration of the information given, and some aspects of this will be examined below. But where there was a departure from the standard form this was nearly always because it was demanded by the conditions of the particular estate, not because the compiler had ideas of his own about how the account should be drawn up. Thus, where we find that an account covers less than a full year, like the four Cuxham accounts for 1348–50 (nos 74–77), this is usually because the reeve or bailiff has been changed,[19] or because a change of ownership makes it necessary to close the account early. Where an account for a second property is appended to a manorial account, this is usually a property distinct from the manor but treated as subsidiary to it and managed by the same local agent; the accounts of Hambledon church appended to those of Hambledon manor on the estate of the bishop of [18] At first sight, for instance, there is great uniformity in the wording of the marginal paragraph headings of manorial accounts, but a list of all variants found in those published here and in other printed editions contains over 500 entries.

[19] An account for Gisleham (Suff.: Biskele fam.) is particularly explicit in its heading: it accounts for 12 weeks only in 1349 'quo anno pestilencia hominum regnauit in Anglia' (BM Add. Roll 26058).

Winchester are an example.[20] Sometimes the nature of the property meant that the local agent had duties very different from the normal reeve or bailiff, and again this would be reflected in the form of the account; thus, Northney (Cambs.), a manor of Ely Cathedral Priory, was primarily a dairy-farm, and the account of the local agent, called a cowherd (vaccarius), in 1344–5 contains only a vestigial corn account and a stock account devoted almost wholly to cattle and their products.[21] In all these cases the variations arise from external circumstances: the compiler of the account is adapting his standard form to meet local conditions. It is in this that the accounts of Phase 2 differ from those of Phase 1, where the variations arise from applying different forms and methods.

How did the uniformity of manorial accounts in Phase 2 come about? It is, after all, a little surprising that a single form of account should be found from one end of the country to the other, on the estates of bishops and abbots as well as of lay lords, on estates of two or three manors as well as on estates of a hundred manors or more. It seems to have come about in four ways; probably they all contributed, though at present we can only guess at their relative importance. First, the many large, widely dispersed estates favoured uniformity. Merton College owned properties scattered from Northumberland to Kent; Isabella de Fortibus, who died in 1293, had estates that extended from Cumberland and Yorkshire to Devon and the Isle of Wight.[22] The existence of estates like these, administered from single centres, must have helped to spread common forms and precluded the development of local or regional peculiarities. Second, it seems likely that there were deliberate exchanges of ideas and methods between one estate and another. The archives of any large landed estate contain 'strays': documents that have no connection with the estate and have found their way into its muniments by some chance circumstance. But in the relatively few undisturbed archives of medieval estates the appearance of account rolls from other, unconnected estates seems too persistent to be accidental. The oldest manorial account in the records of Worcester Cathedral Priory, for the year 1275–6, is from Great Chart (Kent), a manor of the Cathedral Priory at Canterbury;[23] the only thirteenth-century account in the archives of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln is for the Westminster Abbey manor of Battersea (Surrey) in [20] Hants. Record Office, Winchester bpric accts 159483 3/3. A more unusual local variation is found on the account of 1295–6 for Hickley (Hants.: God's House, Southampton) where no stock account is given because it is entered in the accounts of the Hospital and its home farm: 'De exitu stauri non respondet hic quia irrotulatur in compoto hamton'' (muniments of the Queen's Coll., Oxford (deposited in Bodl.), R 181).

1286–7;[24] and so on. The phenomenon deserves further investigation; it may well prove a clue to one way in which uniformity of accounting came about. A third way was the existence at Oxford, perhaps elsewhere too, of what amounted to regular courses in the ars dictaminis, instruction in writing letters, drafting legal instruments and so on, which almost certainly came to include the compilation of manorial accounts.[25] The existence of these courses has been used to explain the efficiency and uniformity of conveyancing documents in England from the late thirteenth century on; even if only a small proportion of the clerks who wrote manorial accounts were trained in this way, they would, through their pupils and their pupils' pupils, still act as a powerful influence towards standardising the forms that had been taught. Fourth, and this is the best attested way, there survive many treatises and specimen accounts which may or may not have served as text-books for courses of instruction but which certainly were in general use as guides in drawing up accounts from the mid-thirteenth century onwards. In some cases we find the specimen adapted for use on a particular estate by the insertion of appropriate headings;[26] in these cases the specimen may easily be mistaken for a genuine account, and there must still be many lying unrecognised for what they are. We owe a great deal to the work of Dr Oschinsky who has done so much to discover and analyse these treatises,[27] but there is still much to be learned from them, particularly in the relationship between the treatises and the detailed variations in surviving accounts.

Probably, then, all four of these factors contributed to the uniformity of the written manorial accounts that came into general use in the late thirteenth century. Particular features of the standard manorial account of Phase 2 can be seen emerging on accounts for individual manors from the mid-thirteenth century onwards. Those for Froyle (Hants.), a manor of St Mary's Abbey, Winchester, are especially interesting here: not only do they probably include the earliest surviving account rolls for an individual manor, but being an almost unbroken series from about 1233 to 1263 they provide a useful guide to the chronological development

[26] Not always very intelligently adapted, it might be added. One for the English estates of Bec Abbey retains a paragraph of 'Expenses of the lord and lady' appropriate to a lay estate (muniments of King's Coll., Cambridge: Ministers' accts before the time of the Coll., Ogbourn 17 Edw. II). Another for the estates of the Harcourt family names as dominus de Harcourt not only the lord of the manor whenever he is mentioned on the account but also a donor of pigs to the manor (BM Add. of the standard form.[28] The earliest Froyle accounts, for instance, like early accounts from other manors, have no heading beyond the name of the manor and the year in which the account was drawn up; the covering dates of the account first appear in 1259–60.[29] Similarly on the Westminster Abbey estates the earliest account for Knightsbridge, for 1257–8, gives the date of the start of the account, but not of its close;[30] the next, for 1262–3, likewise gives only the date when the account opened, but a space has been left blank for its closing date.[31] During the 1260s, however, full headings came into general use; they appear, for instance, at Whitchurch and Wonston (Hants.: Winchester Cathedral Priory) in 1260–1,[32] at Little Hormead (Herts.: Denise le Botiller) in 1261–2[33] and at Banham (Norf.: Bigod family) in 1269–70.[34] But even in 1338–9 we find at Calthorpe (Norf.: St Giles' Hospital, Norwich) an account with no date given beyond the 13th year of Edward III.[35]

Because so few early accounts give their covering dates it is harder to discover when the practice was adopted of drawing up the account for an exact year, usually from Michaelmas to Michaelmas. On some estates this seems to have occurred very early. Both on the estates of the Clare

[28] BM Add. Rolls 13338, 13339, 17457–17478. These all bear dates from the 1st to the 29th year of Abbess A., except Add. Roll 17468, 'De xvij Anno Domine'. The domina here is not Abbess A., for another account is specifically dated in her 17th year (Add. Roll 13339), and as the account resembles those of her earliest years (the accountant is the reeve alone, not reeve and sergeant, and corn is measured in part by the sextar' and the scutell') it must be her predecessor. Abbess A. was Agnes, who died on 30 Aug. 1265 (Annales monastici, ed. H. R. Luard (Rolls Ser.; 5v., 1864–9), ii, p. 102; iv, p. 455). The date of her entry into office is given as 1236 by VCH Hants., ii, p. 126, but the sources cited give the date of her death only. In fact she was probably confirmed in office between 25 Sept. and 6 Dec. 1235: BM Add. Roll 66602, a court roll for the Abbey's manor of Urchfont (Wilts.), records courts held on Saturday the feast of St Nicholas (6 Dec.) in the 25th year of Abbess Agnes's confirmation, on Tuesday the feast of St Peter and St Paul (29 June) 'anno predicto', and on Saturday before the feast of St Michael 'anno eodem'; for the days to fit the date in June must have been in a leap year, and the only reasonable possibility is that it refers to 1259–60, so that 6 Dec. 1259–25 Sept. 1260 lay wholly within the 25th year of her confirmation.

It follows from this that the Froyle account for the first year of Abbess A. (Add. Roll 17457) should probably be dated 29 Sept. 1235–29 Sept. 1236 (it is only in her 26th year that the account specifically runs from Michaelmas to Michaelmas (Add. Roll 17477) but there is no reason to suppose this was not the case earlier). The earlier account does not belong to the preceding year, for the cash balance and arrears do not correspond, but it was probably not much earlier, for it was written in the same hand as the accounts for the first three years of Abbess Agnes. Its date is thus 1233–4 or a year or so earlier.

family and at Winchester Cathedral Priory this was the case by 1262,[36] and the earliest Froyle accounts may also have been drawn up on this basis.[37] At Ramsey Abbey in the 1240s and 1250s accounts were usually from Michaelmas to Michaelmas for cash, but from Lammas (1 August) to Lammas for corn.[38] On the Crowland Abbey estates, however, the account ran on each manor from the auditors' visit one year to their visit the next, which might be several weeks more or less than an exact year;[39] the change to a financial year always ending at Michaelmas had occurred there by 1290.[40] A regular financial year appears on the Merton College estates from the time of the earliest manorial accounts there; at first this ended at Michaelmas, as the earliest accounting records from Cuxham exemplify (nos 30, 31, 33–36, 57), but between 1279 and 1285 this was changed to the financial year ending in late July to which all the other Cuxham accounts conform.[41] At Westminster Abbey a similar change was made more suddenly: the financial year varied from manor to manor until 1284, when the accounts for all manors were closed on 29 September, and thenceforth accounting from Michaelmas to Michaelmas became the rule for the whole estate.[42]

The use of the dorse of the roll for the corn and stock accounts is an almost invariable feature of manorial accounts of Phase 2; where variation occurs this is usually no more than an occasional expedient to save parchment, as on the Cuxham account for 1290–1 (no. 60), where the final items of the stock account are carried over to a blank space at the bottom of the front of the roll. However, most early accounts for individual manors are written entirely on the front of the roll, leaving the dorse blank. This is the case on many of the early Froyle accounts, though occasionally part or all of the stock account would be carried over to the dorse;[43] the corn and stock accounts are first both written on the dorse in 1255–6,[44] and this then becomes the normal arrangement. It is found on accounts from other Winchester estates at about the same time, on the bishop's in 1258–9 and on the Cathedral Priory's in 1260–1.[45] Elsewhere, however, the older form continued longer: at Chesham (Bucks.: in royal hands) in 1260 the dorse is blank,[46] and also at Little Hormead (Herts.: Denise le Botiller) in 1261–2 and 1264–5 apart from the final sections of the stock account,[47] while at Merstham (Surrey: Canterbury Cathedral Priory) in 1281–2 the corn account still appears on the front of the roll with the cash account, the dorse bearing the stock account only.[48] Clearly the form was not firmly established by 1276, the time of the earliest Cuxham account (no. 57), which has on the dorse only the last paragraph of corn and the stock account; an account from Werror (Isle of Wight: God's House Hospital, Southampton) has a similar form as late as 1293–4.[49]

The division of the cash account into the many paragraphs of the normal account roll of Phase 2 can be seen developing gradually on the accounts of Phase 1. In its simplest form the cash account is in two paragraphs only, like the account for any sort of corn or stock, one for receipts, one for expenditure, though with arrears and deliveries of cash entered separately;[50] the receipts paragraph was sometimes headed 'Issues of the manor' (Exitus manerii),[51] the expenditure paragraph 'Necessary expenses' (Expense necessarie).[52] Sometimes some category of either receipts or expenditure would be separated from the rest to form a distinct paragraph with its own sub-total and perhaps a heading in the margin; we often find that at an early stage the forinsec expenses (i.e. expenditure on the lord's behalf unconnected with the running of the manor) were distinguished from the rest.[53] As time went on more and more sub-sections came to be separated in this way, until in Phase 2 account rolls might have a dozen or more paragraphs in each section of the cash account. Relics of the process remained. Totals of expenditure are occasionally given as a 'Total of both expenditures', referring to the division between forinsec and internal expenses,[54] and very commonly, as on most of the Cuxham accounts printed here, we find the old headings

[53] As on the Froyle accounts for the early 1250s (see below); on the Beaulieu Abbey specimen accounts of 1260–70 (BM Add. MS. 48978, ff. 3–25) the forinsec expenses are similarly separated, though occasionally so too are other items of cash discharge (costs of mills and pensio).

for the entire sections of the cash account, 'Issues of the manor' and 'Necessary expenses', being retained for the miscellaneous receipts and the petty expenses, the hard core of items that could not be hived off into specialised sub-sections.[55] All steps in this process can be illustrated from thirteenth-century accounts, though not from the surviving accounts of any single estate. Thus, the earliest accounts from Ramsey Abbey (1243–4) and Westminster Abbey (1252–3) have no sub-divisions, and simply general headings, as 'Receipts' (Recepta) and 'Expenses' (Expensa inde);[56] on accounts for crown lands in Oxfordshire we find the same arrangement but without the headings at Bladon in 1261–3, but at Woodstock in 1262–4 the forinsec expenditure is separated.[57] By this date, however, the Froyle series had advanced many stages in the process: even the earliest roll, of about 1233–4, divides the cash receipts into eight paragraphs and the expenditure into six (few of them with headings)[58] and though by the early 1250s the expenditure was divided between only three paragraphs, 'Necessary expenses', 'Forinsec expenses' and 'Liveries', from 1255–6 on their number rapidly increased so that by 1262–3 costs of ploughs, costs of carts, costs of ditching, etc., wages, harvest expenses, visitors' expenses, forinsec expenses and deliveries of cash were each in a separate paragraph with its own heading and sub-total, leaving only some miscellaneous items as 'Necessary expenses'.[59]

The standard form of account typical of Phase 2 thus emerged gradually, and its development does not make a sudden break with the more varied forms of Phase 1. We find a sharper contrast with earlier practice in the third feature that distinguishes Phase 2 of manorial accounting: the decentralisation of responsibility for preparing the accounts, and their divorce from the elaborate central records of the estate.

On most of the estates for which we have manorial accounts from Phase 1 some at least of these records survive in the form of enrolled copies. Instead of an account for a single manor, the roll comprises fair copies of the accounts for a number of manors, perhaps the whole estate, for a particular year. In most cases the accounts are set out manor by manor, covering cash, corn and stock on each in turn; this was the form used on the estates of the bishop of Winchester, for instance, as well as of the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop of Worcester, Crowland Abbey and elsewhere.[60] But the Bec Abbey estates entered all the cash accounts on the front of the roll and all the corn accounts on the dorse,[61] while from the Clare estates between 1234 and 1243 there survive separate annual rolls of the cash expenses and of corn accounts on particular groups of manors;[62] a similar roll of corn accounts, but of successive years on a single manor, survives from Eltham (Kent) in the mid-thirteenth century.[63] From the bishop of Winchester's estates we have not only the nearly complete series of enrolled accounts; for 1240–1 we have a very curious analysis giving the total sum received or spent on the estate as a whole under some forty headings (sales of cheese, expenses of ploughs and carts and so on),[64] while from 1259–60 we have both a special enrolment of the corn and stock accounts for each manor and the beginning of an amalgamated corn account for the entire estate.[65] These Winchester records of 1240–1 and 1259–60 survive because the see was then in the king's hands and they were preserved in the public records, but there is no reason to suppose that records of this sort were not drawn up at Winchester in normal years as well. They suggest that the manorial accounts of Phase 1 that survive are mere fragments of a mass of records produced by strongly centralised systems of estate management and accounting; their very complexity may help to explain why their use was mostly confined to a few very large estates.

Two features of early manorial accounts are symptomatic of this strong centralisation. One is their close association, on many estates, with accounts of other officials in the organisation. The most extreme example of this is the astonishing book of specimen accounts drawn up for Beaulieu Abbey probably late in Henry III's reign.[66] It includes accounts not only for the estate's nineteen granges and manors, but also for every obedientiary and minor officer of the monastery, the whole amounting to some fifty different accounts, all carefully integrated into a single system of accounting. It is hardly likely that annual written accounts were drawn up on this scale even at Beaulieu, but we do sometimes find the accounts of other offices enrolled with those of the manors: at Crowland Abbey, for instance, the cellarer, larderer and others, at Peterborough the bakery and the pig-keeper.[67] The 'Rules' of Robert Grosseteste show how closely household and estate were linked in a single organisation in the thirteenth century.[68] It is significant that surviving records of the Clare family in this period include some of the earliest known household accounts as well as some of the earliest manorial accounts from a lay estate;[69] and it may also be significant that the earliest accounts of monastic obedientiaries in the public records come from Peterborough Abbey,[70] which also produced manorial records that clearly belong to Phase 1. The second feature pointing to this strong centralisation is the prevalence of joint accounting: the account would be presented not just by the bailiff or reeve of the single manor, but by the local agent on the manor together with the bailiff who had general oversight of a section of the estate. The system has already been described from the estate records of both the bishopric and the Cathedral Priory at Winchester, and it has been shown that although both officers are named in the account the local agent alone bore financial responsibility.[71] The system occurs elsewhere; the estates of the archbishop of Canterbury are one example, and another is provided by the accounts of the Botiller family's manor of Little Hormead (Herts.) in the 1260's, likewise presented jointly by the reeve and the constable, who was in fact a supervising bailiff.[72] Here again we see the accounting system reflecting close, centralised supervision.

[60] As exemplified by: Hants. Record Office, Winchester bpric accts 159270; BM Add. MS. 29794; Bodl. MS. Worcestershire Rolls 4; muniments of Queens' Coll., Cambridge (deposited in CUL), Crowland Abbey enrolled accts 1.

[64] PRO SC6/1143/1. It is perhaps significant that it was sometimes in this form that the issues of estates in the king's hands were entered on the Exchequer Pipe Rolls; the bishop of Winchester's estate appears thus in 1205 (Great roll of the pipe for the seventh year of the reign of King John, ed. [66] BM Add. MS. 48978.

What documents were used to draw up the enrolled accounts that were at the heart of the system? Their exact nature probably varied from estate to estate. The enrolled accounts of the Bec Abbey estates, which gave few details and were entered up a manor or so at a time as the auditors made their circuit,[73] could well have been based on no more than a few scribbled notes; the detailed accounts for the estates of the archbishop of Canterbury, which were written apparently as a single operation after the audit was completed, must have been copied from a more or less elaborate account

These are not, though, the earliest accounts of individual monastic obedientiaries to survive: a cellarer's account of 1240 and bursars' account of 1242 are known from Kingswood Abbey (Gloucs.) and are printed by V. R. Perkins, 'Documents relating to the monastery of St Mary, Kingswood', Trans. of the Bristol and Gloucs. Arch. Soc. xxii (1899), pp. 193–201. The earliest surviving account for a single grange from Kingswood seems to be not earlier than 1288–9 (ibid., pp. 232–4), though an account of wages for the whole estate in 1255 (ibid., pp. 209–13) points to centralised manorial accounting there in the mid-13th century.

roll for each manor.[74] In a very few cases account rolls of this sort survive. From the bishop of Winchester's estates we have an account of Highclere (Hants.) in 1258–9 that is the only survivor before the mid-fourteenth century of the individual accounts used to draw up the annual roll;[75] from Winchester Cathedral Priory an account for Wyke-next-Portland (Dorset) in 1242–3 is probably another example,[76] while this may well have been the origin of the Froyle (Hants.) accounts of c. 1233–1263 from St Mary's Abbey, Winchester.[77] From the Wiltshire estates of Adam de Stratton from 1275 to 1288 there survives a series of original accounts as well as the enrolled copies; they show that on enrolment the account underwent some rearrangement as well as abridgment of detail.[78] Most of these accounts for individual manors were drawn up before the audit was held, for they show additions and corrections of the sort made by auditors; the enrolled copies would incorporate these changes, though in a few cases notes on the enrolments suggest that the accounts were also subject to a further central scrutiny.[79] On two estates we see a most interesting development taking place. The earliest accounts covering the whole estates of Winchester Cathedral Priory and Crowland Abbey are enrolments, but later — at Winchester between 1248 and 1261, at Crowland between 1315 and 1319 — there was kept instead of an enrolled account for each year a collection of accounts for individual manors, filed together to form a single roll and annotated with the name of the manor at the foot of every account for easy reference.[80] Clearly what had happened was that the accounts from the individual manors had come to be so formalised, so carefully written, that there seemed no point in the immense labour of copying out all the accounts as an enrolled fair copy; it was sufficient to keep the individual accounts that formerly had simply served as drafts for the enrolment.

At first sight we might say that we see here the emergence of the system of accounts for individual manors that characterised Phase 2; that the system of accounting that became widespread in the late thirteenth century was in fact the same system of centralised accounts that we find in Phase 1, but modified so that its basis was an annual collection of accounts of individual manors instead of an enrolment of accounts from the entire estate. But in fact there is a fundamental difference between these filed collections of individual accounts and the manorial accounts of Phase 2. It will appear if we compare the manorial accounts of Winchester Cathedral Priory for 1267, the first year for which a complete file survives,[81] with those compiled in 1318 for the manors of the bishop of London, then in the hands of the Dean and Chapter, and preserved as a collection in their archives ever since.[82] The 1267 Winchester accounts cover 15 manors and, setting aside auditors' alterations and additions, they were written by only four different hands, of which one wrote the accounts for seven manors, one for five, one for two and one for one. The division is geographical: thus, the five accounts written by the second hand cover the Wiltshire manors of the estate. The 1318 St Paul's accounts, on the other hand, are for 11 manors, and each is written in a different hand except those for Laindon and Orsett, neighbouring manors in south Essex.[83] This points to a distinction that is of some importance: in Phase 1 accounts even for individual manors were normally drafted by someone sent out from the estate's central organisation who visited each manor in turn; in Phase 2 the writing of the accounts was normally organised by the reeves or bailiffs themselves, using whatever local talent was available to them.

[80] In mun. D. & C. Winchester the account for the Priory estates in 1247–8 is an enrolment; the next in date to survive, from Alton Priors, Barton Priors, Whitchurch and Wonston in 1260–1, now form four separate rolls, but the identical sewing holes along the top of each show that they were originally filed together, like the accounts of 1266–7 and many later years. In the Crowland accounts, muniments of Queens' Coll., Cambridge (deposited in CUL), Oakington Bailiff's acct 1, mem. 1 (16–17, recte 15–16, Abbot Simon) was originally filed with other manorial accounts for the same year; this is shown by the reference at the foot ('Anno xvj Hokyntone xix rotulus').

It was this decentralised form of manorial accounting that spread so rapidly from the 1270s onwards. Why it did so is a problem that is still unanswered, but we should not overlook the possibility that the initiative came not from the estate owners but from their local agents: the reeve or bailiff found that he was much better able to stand up to the auditors' inquisition if he came provided with a written account setting out his receipts and expenditure in due form, so that he considered it worth his while to have an account drawn up at his own expense — like a man of today employing an accountant to prepare his Income Tax return. More certainly, the elaborate centralised records of Phase 1 find no place in Phase 2 of manorial accounting: in adopting the form of manorial account that had been developed from a highly centralised estate administration, estate owners saw no reason to take over the other types of document that had been associated with it. Central records of manorial accounting in Phase 2 tended to be few and simple, and to decrease as time went on. Those of Merton College exemplify this very well. A roll called a calendar (kalendare) was drawn up each year, giving for each manor in turn a list of the paragraph headings of the cash account with the total received or spent under each heading, the grand totals and the cash balance;[84] this, a vestige of the enrolled accounts of Phase 1, last appears in 1329 and may then have ceased to be drawn up. Grain estimate rolls, identifying the stacks of unthreshed corn and the amount of grain that each was expected to produce, survive for a few years down to 1322.[85] Otherwise the only central manorial record that Merton College produced in the period covered by this volume was an enrolment of the corn and stock accounts from a number of manors for four successive years, from 1333 to 1337,[86] and this seems more likely to have been compiled for some ad hoc reason than as the result of continuing tradition or a policy of elaborate centralised records. The various officials of the College — Warden, Sub-warden and Bursars — submitted their own annual accounts, but these were not integrated with the manorial accounts in a unified accounting system on the Beaulieu model. In Phase 2 of manorial accountancy far more than in Phase 1 the individual manor's account was compiled independently of the other financial records of the particular estate.

[83] This is a slightly simplified description. For Harringay the period is covered in two successive accounts, both written in the same hand. From Wickham, too, there are two successive accounts, and the first of these and the account for Lodsworth are both in a hand that entered the auditors' alterations on the accounts for Wickham and several other manors. But the accounts for the eleven manors were drawn up by ten different hands.

The fourth feature that distinguishes Phase 2 of manorial accounting from Phase 1 is the custom of carrying forward a balance from one year's account to the next. This feature is much less marked than the other three, and is never more than a tendency one way or the other. On early surviving enrolled accounts for the bishop of Winchester's estates, in 1210–11, we find that on half the manors a balance of cash owing to the bishop had been carried forward and in some cases was incorporated in the current year's account.[87] Conversely, it is not unusual on an account of Phase 2 to find that the auditors, in a sudden access of efficiency or [84] Nos 33, 36, 39 and 40 are extracts from these calendars; see also Appendix I. A portion of a more elaborate version, approximating more to an enrolment of the accounts, survives from 1280–1 (MM 5055; it does not cover Cuxham); records of this sort may have been the predecessors of the calendars at Merton. Summaries like the Merton calendars may, though, be an older form of record than fully enrolled accounts; this is suggested particularly by the records of Canterbury Cathedral Priory, such as the roll of manorial receipts for 1207–8 (Interdict documents, ed. Patricia M. Barnes and W. R. Powell (Pipe Roll Soc., N.S. xxxiv; 1960), pp. 69–80). A similar document from an estate where enrolling of accounts had been given up is the so-called roll of issues (rotulus de exitibus) from the Bec Abbey estates in 1295–6 (muniments of King's Coll., Cambridge, Ministers' accts before the time of the Coll.); this may, however, have originated in the exceptional circumstances of that year, when the estates were in the king's hands as property of an alien priory.

[85] Nos 29, 32 and 38 are extracts from these estimates; see also Appendix I. Similar rolls were drawn up at Norwich Cathedral Priory, where not only the issue of corn was estimated, but also unavoidable expenditure on seed, fodder and so on (Saunders, Norwich, p. 13 and plate facing p. 17).

losing patience over a reeve's particularly long-standing debt, order an outstanding balance to be paid forthwith; an example occurs at Cuxham in 1334–5, when the cash account closes with a memorandum that the reeve was to pay off his debt of £19 16*s.* 7½*d.* in equal portions at three fixed dates in the coming months.[88] Still, it is true that it is much more usual to find accounts closed without a cash balance being carried forward in Phase 1 than in Phase 2. A relic of this survives in certain accounting treatises of the late thirteenth century, which mention as one of the features of the Winchester method of accounting that if any balance of cash were carried forward from the last year's account as arrears (arreragia, owed by the reeve or bailiff to the lord) or surplus (superplusagium or excessus, owed by the lord to the reeve or bailiff) it would be settled at the start of the audit, and not included in the calculation of the present year's account.[89] What the treatises do not mention, probably because it had largely disappeared by the time they were written, is the tendency on some accounts of Phase 1 to close not only the cash account but also the various categories of the corn account at the end of the financial year, so that little or no corn is entered as left in the granary to be carried forward to the next year's account. Examples of this are at Tredington (Warw.: bishop of Worcester) in 1246–7, Syleham (Suff.: Bigod family) in 1268–9 and Edington (Wilts.: Romsey Abbey) in 1283–4,[90] and on the estates of Winchester Cathedral Priory it occurs even as late as 1325–6 at Whitchurch.[91] It is not impossible that it was to secure as near a balance as possible that on the early Ramsey Abbey accounts the corn was reckoned from Lammas to Lammas, instead of from Michaelmas to Michaelmas like the cash.[92] It is not difficult to see why the earliest manorial accounts had this predilection for closing the account in both cash and corn if we accept that they developed from a system of purely oral accounting. Without some form of written document it would be very risky to try to carry balances of either cash or corn forward from one year to the next; in the case of livestock, of course, a remainder to carry forward was inevitable, and it would be interesting to know what expedients were used to guard against dispute or fraud.[93]

[92] In the enrolled accounts of 1252–3 and 1253–4 for 15 manors on BM Add. Roll 39669 the dating of probably all but three conforms to this pattern. It is possible that on the Ramsey estates and elsewhere in the mid-13th century the corn accounts are based on estimates of the amounts of corn in stacks before threshing, not on the amounts actually threshed; this would explain the occasional excess of expenditure over receipts of corn, as at Broughton (Hunts.) in 1249–50 (BM Add. Roll 34903) when the amounts were considerable (112 rings 3 bus. wheat; 43½ rings maslin; 38½ rings barley). At Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester) in 1244–5 the balance of wheat is entered in the form 'And there remain in the granary and in the barn, by estimation, 38½ qr.' (BM Add. Roll 17465), but the usual form at Froyle is simply 'And there remain in the granary . . .'

This completes the survey of the distinguishing features of the second phase of manorial accounting and of their origin and development in the course of the first phase. The next two chapters will examine the detailed working of manorial accountancy in Phase 2 and the further changes that occurred. Even the earliest manorial records of Merton College belong to this second phase; and indeed it is only to be expected that an estate organisation newly formed in 1264 by a man of affairs such as Walter de Merton would adopt the most up-to-date methods.[94] The Merton College records in fact are one of the two medieval archives surviving intact that best exemplify the second phase of accounting; the other is the Westminster Abbey muniments. There, the earliest manorial accounts to survive date from 1252–3[95] and from the start they conform in almost every feature to the pattern of Phase 2. The contrast with accounts surviving from the first half of the thirteenth century is so strong that it seems very likely that written accounts were an innovation on the Westminster estates in the 1250s and that when the accounting treatises describe the differences between the Winchester and the Westminster accounts they are unconsciously contrasting old and new, two different stages in development.[96]

But although estates that used written accounts for the first time in the 1260s were adopting the methods of Phase 2 this is not to say that estates where the methods of Phase 1 were in use soon changed to the newer forms.[97] On the estates of the bishops of Winchester Phase 2 methods were never adopted: although from the 1340s the annual accounts of individual manors were normally preserved and survive to this day, they were still being copied out on a central enrolment in the mid-fifteenth century. Here, as so often, we find the institution that led the way in one stage of development becoming fixed in its ideas, perhaps enamoured of its own ingenuity and initiative, and refusing to adopt the improvements

[93] It may be that indentures of account antedated written account rolls and served this purpose, and it is possible too that this is related to the practice of clerks, in drawing up accounts of Phase 2, of always entering the balance remaining of each type of stock, even though the balances of cash and corn were left blank for insertion at the audit (see below, pp. 50, 62–3).

[94] In contrast, though, the accounting methods used by Adam de Stratton on the estate that he built up in the 1260s and 1270s retain features of Phase 1 (Stratton accts, pp. ix–xi and passim).

[95] From Todenham (Gloucs.; WAM 25900); the only other manorial accounts from Westminster earlier than 1270 are from Knightsbridge (Middx), 1256–7, 1261–2 (WAM 16367, 16368) and from Launton (Oxon.), 1267–8, 1268–9 (WAM 15286, 15286*).

[96] Oschinsky, Henley, pp. 214–18, 466.

[97] On some estates, such as Bec and Peterborough Abbeys, the earliest surviving accounts date from the late 13th century but belong indisputably to Phase 1; it is possible that these estates adopted Phase 1 accounting at a late date, but it seems a little more likely that their earlier accounts have simply failed to survive.

devised elsewhere. Other estates, though, were less inflexible. The last surviving central enrolment of accounts for the archbishop of Canterbury's manors dates from 1273–4, the first surviving accounts of an individual manor from 1279–80;[98] on the Bec Abbey estates the corresponding dates are 1288–9 and 1292.[99] At best, though, the change to Phase 2 was a slow, piecemeal process. The annual accounts for Froyle were still being written in the Winchester form in the 1360s, though the view of account, the check made partway through the financial year, took the normal form of an account of Phase 2.[100]

But the change from the first to the second phase of manorial accounting reflected far more than a simple change in systems of account. This is not the place to discuss developments in general methods of organisation which varied widely from one estate to another and with which the particular accounting system in use was necessarily closely linked. But it can be said that the transition to Phase 2 typified a general trend: a trend away from close centralised planning for a whole estate, a trend away from a continuing close watch on all a local agent's activities, and a trend towards giving the man on the spot greater freedom and manoeuvrability, subject only to searching scrutiny at the annual audit of his account.[101] Most of the surviving treatises on estate management reflect the conditions of the period of close supervision: the 'Seneschaucy', the 'Rules' of Robert Grosseteste, the 'Scriptum quoddam' of the Gloucester cartulary, and even Walter of Henley's 'Husbandry'. This is inevitable, since it was just this close supervision that created the need for them. But it is not surprising that with the exception of Walter of Henley's work, which had permanent value in its advice on agrarian techniques, these works were seldom copied after 1300;[102] like the accounting methods of Phase 1, they belong peculiarly to a type of estate management that was waning in the late thirteenth century. An aspect of these broader changes that appears very clearly in the accounts is the disappearance of the method of joint accounting by the local agent on the manor and the bailiff who was his immediate superior in favour of accounting by the reeve or bailiff on the individual manor alone. On Adam de Stratton's manor of Sevenhampton (Wilts.) the change occurred in 1273, on the estates of Winchester Cathedral Priory not until the 1320s;[103] on accounts clearly of Phase 2 joint accounting hardly ever occurs.[104] Henceforth the local reeve or bailiff was solely and directly responsible for his charge to the estate's central organisation.

Ultimately, this move away from central organisation and towards local initiative may be seen as the first step away from demesne farming and back to a system of leasing that restored full responsibility to the local farmer, the lessee who replaced the reeve or bailiff. Reversion to leasing of manors did not become general until after 1350, but the first half of the fourteenth century saw increasing moves in this direction — making the reeve answer for a pre-determined yield of corn or stock, hiring out a manor's cattle or poultry, leasing small parcels of demesne to the local tenants, and so on — and it is against this background that we should see the various developments that occurred in the second phase of manorial accounting. It is with the leasing of entire manors that the second phase gave way to the third. Its features are in some respects a reversion to those of Phase 1. The standard form of account typical of Phase 2 remained in use, but very much abridged, since the lessee was accountable to his landlord for much less than the reeve or bailiff had been. The manner of abridgment varied according to the terms of the particular lease and the custom of the clerk who wrote it; consequently there is greater variety of form of account than in Phase 2, and in some places a tendency towards informality, even scrappiness, in presentation.[105] At the same time, in shedding local responsibilities the landlords gave renewed importance to the central records of the estate.[106] Much in these developments is of wide historical interest and significance, but they lie outside the scope of the present book.

[104] An example, however, is Downham (Cambs.: bishop of Ely) in 1302 (Ely diocesan records (deposited in CUL), D 10/2/1).

[105] An interesting example of a manorial account written in English is printed by R. Sharpe France, 'A Stanley account roll, 1460', Trans. of the Hist. Soc. of Lancs. and Cheshire cxiii (1961), pp. 203–9.

[106] The form and complexity of the central financial records of a great lay estate in the 15th century, as well as their relationship to local accounts, are very well demonstrated in the accounts of 1447–8 for the Newport lordship of Humphrey, duke of Buckingham, in The marcher lordships of south Wales 1416–1536: select documents, ed. T. B. Pugh (Board of Celtic Studies, Univ. of Wales: History and Law Ser. xx; 1963), pp. 153–75, 184–236.

4. THE COMPILATION OF A MANORIAL ACCOUNT

The purpose of this chapter is to show how an account was drawn up in the second phase of manorial accounting. It must be emphasised that written accounts of this phase survive from a great many estates, estates differing greatly in composition, size, type of ownership and tradition. We cannot expect to find complete uniformity and, indeed, it is possible to find exceptions to almost every practice described here. All the same, the similarities between all manorial accounts of this phase are very striking, and it is not difficult to discover the norm to which most of these records conform.

It was suggested in the last chapter that the typical manorial account of Phase 2 was drawn up by a clerk acting under the instructions of the reeve or bailiff. In fact, relatively few manorial accounts include entries of payment to the clerk that wrote them — perhaps not more than one in four of those surviving from Phase 2. It would be easy to conclude that where no payment is mentioned the account was written by a clerk sent out by the estate owner, as seems to have been usual in Phase 1, and that this was still the normal practice. But it is unlikely that this was so. There are two odd features about the payments to clerks that are entered on the accounts. One is the tendency for all or part of the amount to be described as an ex gratia payment. This was the case at Cuxham in 1294–5 when the clerk's expenses, though not his 4*s*. 0*d*. wage, were so described,[1] while from 1304–5 to 1318–19 2*s*. 0*d*. was given 'to the clerk who made the account' and 2*s*. 0*d*. extra was added 'as an act of grace' (de gracia).[2] The other odd feature is the frequency with which the payments to the clerk were disallowed by the auditors of the account. This too can be seen at Cuxham: in 1296–7 a claim for an extra 10*d*. for parchment and the clerk's other expenses was disallowed,[3] in 1298–9 the 4*s*. 0*d*. wage seems to have been reduced to 2*s*. 0*d*. on audit,[4] in 1299–1300 we find the reeve seeking 'remission for his clerk's wage',[5] and in 1319–20 and 1320–1 the auditors disallowed the 2*s*. 0*d*. ex gratia payment which does not appear subsequently.[6] A later series of accounts from Lamberhurst (Kent: Robertsbridge Abbey) provides another example: on the four complete accounts surviving from 1370 to 1377 payment to the clerk was entered on the first as 2*s*. 0*d*. but reduced on audit to 20*d*. (this account was a short one), on the second as 3*s*. 4*d*., and on both the third and the fourth as 6*s.* 8*d.* reduced on audit to 3*s.* 4*d.*[7] The 1318 accounts from the bishop of London's manors are instructive here.[8] The accounts for five of the eleven manors make no mention of payment. On four manors payments were entered and reduced on audit: from 2*s.* 0*d.* to 18*d.*, from 20*d.* to 18*d.*, from 12*d.* to 8*d.* and from 12*d.* to 6*d.*[9] On the other two manors payments of 12*d.* were entered and allowed;[10] on one of these the entry was not made by the clerk who compiled the account, but was added in the hand of the auditor's alterations. Where the same clerk wrote the accounts for two manors (which had different reeves) on one the entry of 12*d.* was reduced to 6*d.* on audit, and on the other no payment was entered at all.[11] The differing amounts paid bear no relation to the length or complexity of the particular account. All these cases, and particularly the London accounts, point clearly to one conclusion: primarily, payment of the clerk was the responsibility of the reeve or bailiff. If the owner of the estate made any contribution towards paying him this was an act of grace, not the repayment of a necessary expense, such as the wages of the manorial servants; the extent of this contribution was a matter for individual negotiation between the local official and the auditors, and its amount — indeed, whether it was paid at all — varied from one manor to another on the same estate according to custom.[12] This is stated very precisely by an auditor's note on the account of 1353 for Merton College's property at Ponteland (Northumb.): the clerk's stipend was to be at the discretion of the Fellows of the College who visited the manor.[13] Essentially it was the reeve or bailiff who employed the clerk; he was 'the reeve's clerk' as the accounts sometimes put it. That this was so adds much weight to the suggestion that the second phase of manorial accounting originated not in the estate owners' insistence on written accounts, but in the local agents' own desire to protect themselves against severe auditing. Certainly, though, it may be taken that whether or not payment was entered in the account, it was normally the reeve or bailiff who provided the clerk, not the estate owner.[14]

Who then were these clerks, and what were the conditions of their employment? It is clear from the spread not only of manorial accounts [14] This is unambiguously stated in a short treatise on drawing up a manorial account that is prefixed to a specimen account in a late-14th-century Durham manuscript: 'Note that at the beginning of the year or on his entry into office the bailiff or reeve shall find a clerk who knows how to set out his roll and his position competently' (Oschinsky, Henley, pp. 50, 464).

but of other types of document that in the late thirteenth century there came into being a new or much enlarged class of professional writers, drafters of letters, conveyances, accounts and so on; little, however, is known of their identity or their careers. For this the evidence of the Cuxham records is especially interesting.[15] The earliest group of local accounting documents there, those of 1276–9 (nos 30, 31, 34, 35, 57), were drawn up by three different hands. Two of them (hands v and vi) wrote two documents each, but do not recur, and we can tell nothing of the writers. The third (hand x) is more interesting. This writer wrote the view of account for 1278–9 (no. 35); soon afterwards, in 1281, he appears again as the writer of a court roll (no. 88)[16] and he continued occasionally in this capacity until 1313. Meanwhile, in about 1296 he added the names of the Cuxham tenants to a list of suitors at manorial courts throughout the estate (no. 26)[17] and in 1297–8 wrote a Cuxham custumal (no. 27). Among the documents in the present volume his is the only hand that appears on central records of the estate as well as on local manorial rolls, and it is quite likely that he lived in Oxford and may even have been a permanent employee of the College. The other Cuxham accounts down to 1359, including those unpublished, were drawn up in the first instance by only seven different hands in all.[18] Of five of these writers we know little or nothing, but the other two are worth examining more closely.[19]

The first is the writer of hand xxi, who compiled all surviving accounts for Cuxham from 1301–2 until 1320–1 (of these only two are printed here, as nos 67, 68, but part of the former is reproduced as Plate I). He can almost certainly be identified as someone variously named Robert Molendinarius, Robert Clericus son of Adam Molendinarius, and Robert Clericus of Cuxham. His father, Adam Molendinarius, was tenant of the prior of Wallingford's mill in Cuxham, with 5 acres of land, as well as another acre that he held there of Merton College;[20] Adam is first mentioned in 1279 and he died in 1301 or 1302.[21] Adam's successor to the mill and the land was another son, Adam, who is also referred to as

[16] His additions to the court roll of June 1279 (no. 87) were probably made at the same time.

[17] The same hand also wrote the names of suitors at Kibworth Harcourt (Leics.) but not the rest of the list, to which these two manors may have been late additions.

[18] I.e. apart from hand xxvi, which wrote part of no. 78, and the hand that entered the discharge of oats on no. 61.

[19] I have already touched on their careers in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 144. It should be mentioned that hand xii, which wrote the Cuxham accounts from 1288 to 1295 (nos 58–63), also wrote accounts for the Merton manor of Ibstone (Bucks.) in 1293–5 and perhaps also in 1305–6 (MM 5062, 5063, 5072).

Adam of Watlington and Adam of Cuxham and who was still in occupation in 1316;[22] Robert was thus probably a younger son. Robert first appears at Cuxham in 1298–9 as supervisor of threshing on behalf of the College, and he probably served in the same capacity each year to 1301–2, as well as supervising the harvest in 1301 and 1302.[23] This would involve his staying at Cuxham for much of each year, possibly in the manor-house; he was paid 4 qr. of wheat or currall annually from the demesne as well as being given food at harvest and perhaps a money payment. After the autumn of 1302 he does not reappear as a supervisor, and he had evidently resigned from the College's service for he was given arrears of payment 'from the time when he was in the service of the House of Merton'.[24] His identification with the writer of the Cuxham manorial accounts for 1301–2 (compiled in the summer of 1302) and for the next nineteen years rests partly on the coincidence of dates, but more on the extra payments to the clerk allowed on two early accounts in the new hand 'because he is known to us'[25] and on the continuing references to Robert Clericus as an inhabitant of Cuxham. In 1304 he was living there in a house with a second room, probably held of a free tenant of the College; he then owned a cow and a stock of corn, but as none of this was sown he probably had no arable land.[26] It is very tempting to connect this with his father's death in 1301–2. In this case we might reconstruct his career on these lines: being a younger son he did not follow his father's trade as miller, but took employment with the lord of the manor, partly at Oxford though latterly his duties took him to Cuxham; while in this service, or perhaps earlier, he learned to write and to account, probably at Oxford; on his father's death he took over the family house at Cuxham, perhaps because his brother Adam was already well established in Watlington, the next village, and he spent the rest of his life as a freelance clerk, making a living from what work he could get in the area. This accords well with the evidence of other records: he may very well have been the R. or Robert Clericus whose expenses in harvesting on the Merton manor of Gamlingay (Cambs.) and in a journey to Eynsham are entered on a Bursar's account for 1291,[27] and also the Robert Clericus who was amerced 2*d.* for trespass at Watlington in 1297–8.[28] His hand appears on accounts for other manors of the College: at Ibstone (Bucks.) from 1277 to 1287 and from 1296, with some gaps, until 1311, and at Cheddington (Bucks.) in 1297–9.[29]

He must, then, have been at least in his forties by the time he set up house at Cuxham in 1302. Probably the end of the series of accounts in his hand, in 1321, marks his death; in 1328 his executors were bringing an action for debt against one Robert of Lichfield, said to be parson of Middleton by Pickering, in Yorkshire.[30]

The account for 1321–2 was written in a hand that does not recur in the Cuxham records, but the following year's account is the first of the long series in hand xxiii, probably the most competent of the clerks whose work is printed in this volume (a specimen is reproduced in Plate II). Of the writer's identity we can be certain. In 1335 the auditors ordered the reeve of Cuxham to pay off his debt to the College at certain fixed terms, and 'Robert of Chalgrove, his clerk' stood surety in £6 of the debt;[31] a combined roll of accounts for a number of Merton manors in the same year also notes this arrangement but names the surety as Robert Attenellum, and it is as Robert ate Elme that he appears in the next year's Cuxham account when a similar arrangement was made.[32] We know less of his career than we know of Robert Molendinarius, but Chalgrove is a parish adjoining Cuxham to the north-west and it is likely that he worked there as a local professional writer, like Robert Molendinarius to whose practice he may have succeeded. He appears as the writer of most of the manorial accounts for Ibstone (Bucks.) from 1341 to 1354;[33] this, six miles from Cuxham, was the Merton College manor with which it had closest links, and it is easy to see how his contacts with Cuxham might have brought him this work. From 1328 to 1341 he appears at both Cuxham and Ibstone as the writer of the court rolls. It seems to have been the duty of the steward who held the courts to find the clerk to write the rolls,[34] and it is interesting that for much of this period the steward was Hugh de Berewyk;[35] the villages of Berrick Prior and Berrick Salome are within three miles of both Cuxham and Chalgrove, and possibly this work too came to him through local contact. When John Brun took over as steward in 1343 the court rolls were written in a different hand. Robert of Chalgrove survived the Black Death in 1349, and he acted as executor to Robert Oldman, reeve of Cuxham, who succumbed to it.[36] He continued to write the accounts for Oldman's successors and in fact he was responsible for every Cuxham account from 1322–3 to 1353–4 except two: in 1350–1 he handed over to someone else partway through writing the roll (no. 78) perhaps because of illness, and in 1352 a bailiff who took charge of the manor for a couple of months seems to have had his own clerk, or may have written the account himself (no. 80). The disappearance of Robert of Chalgrove's hand after 1354 presumably marks his retirement or death.

We need, of course, many more case-studies of this sort to gain a detailed picture of the class of professional clerks who wrote manorial accounts and other business documents in this period. Even so, the careers of Robert Molendinarius and Robert of Chalgrove give us useful pointers. Both were working in a local context: they came from villages that were of no particular significance either as local markets or as administrative centres of estates, and their work seems to have come to them through local and personal contacts.[37] How far they were typical in this we cannot say, nor how far their skills and their careers were affected by their proximity to Oxford and its courses in the ars dictaminis. What we know of them, though, fits in well with the evidence of manorial accounts of Phase 2 from other estates; we have seen, for instance, how on eleven manors of the bishop of London's estates in 1318 the accounts of all but two neighbouring manors were written by different hands,[38] and it is unusual to find manorial accounts of Phase 2 written by a clerk sent out to the manor from the centre of the estate. Cases do, of course, occur. This seems to have been the position of Robert Molendinarius when he wrote accounts at Ibstone and Cheddington in the late thirteenth century, while the Cuxham accounts from 1354 to 1359 (nos. 82–85) were probably written by John Clericus, who was sent out from Merton College for the purpose, perhaps a reflection of the dislocation caused by frequent changes of reeve or bailiff in the 1350s.[39] Again, on the estates of God's House, Southampton, in the 1290s, some accounts for widely separated manors are written in a single hand.[40] But by and large, when the reeve or bailiff of a manor set about making up his annual account it was to local talent that he turned.

It has been suggested that the duties of a professional clerk who would draw up manorial accounts might involve an element of supervision of local officials, if only through auditing, and that his training, at Oxford or elsewhere, might thus include instruction in agriculture and estate

[37] A similar picture is presented by Stratton accts, p. ix: the drafts of the accounts, but not the enrolments, were written by a local hand that also wrote the rolls for the hundred court.

[39] I. clericus is unambiguously identified as the writer in no. 84 (for. exp.), and thus as hand xxx, the writer of nos 82, 83 and 85 also; for his identification as John Clericus see above, p. 7, n. 1. The reference in no. 82 (for. exp.) to Mr Richard Bilyngham as coming to Cuxham to oversee the manor and draw up the account in June 1355 might seem to contradict this, but he probably simply supervised its compilation. Hand xxx also wrote accounts for Ibstone (Bucks.) between 1354 and 1364 (MM 5101–5105, 5107–5109).

management.[41] At first sight the career of Robert Molendinarius lends weight to this suggestion: here we have a trained clerk who for some years was employed as a manorial overseer on the Merton College estates. But it is noteworthy that his two rôles at Cuxham did not coincide. During the years when he supervised the threshing and harvest there the annual accounts were written by someone else; it was only in 1302, when his retirement from the College's service was at hand, that he started to write the Cuxham account rolls. From then on he never supervised the work on the manorial demesne, nor did his successor, Robert of Chalgrove, ever appear in this capacity.[42] From time to time, certainly, clerks do oversee the work of a manor; an earlier example from Cuxham occurs in 1288–9, when Geoffrey Clericus stayed ten months on the manor to supervise the new reeve,[43] and at Great Stukeley (Hunts.: Camoys family) in 1342–3 we find that one of the two supervisors of threshing was named Stephen Clericus.[44] But what was wanted for this supervisory work was a man who was reliable and honest; there is nothing to suggest that professional clerks were particularly suited for it by reason of a training in estate management. Certainly it seems unlikely that estate owners would wish the man who supervised the work of the reeve to compile the account that presented his year's activity in the best possible light. It is probably no coincidence that the two phases of the career of Robert Molendinarius at Cuxham do not overlap.

Another very interesting suggestion is that with the spread of literacy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries it became normal for a manorial reeve or bailiff to write his accounts himself.[45] The evidence for this is that the accounts from different manors of a single estate were written in different hands; but we have seen, both from the accounts of Cuxham and from the accounts of the bishop of London's manors, that this is to be explained by the employment of local clerks and that even where no clerk's payment is entered on the account it cannot be assumed that none was employed. One of the writers of Cuxham accounts, the anonymous hand xii, occasionally used the first person singular: horses' fodder was provided 'for my lords' when they passed through Cuxham in 1292–3, and the next year for the steward 'when I was away rendering account'.[46]

[46] Nos 62 (oats), 63 (oats). Another case occurs on the petition for allowances attached to the account for 1345–6 (MM 5871), which is written by Robert of Chalgrove (hand xxiii): 'Et de xij d. datis homini regine antequam habui proteccionem'.

But these same accounts include payments to the clerk who wrote them, and he must simply have been unconsciously using the reeve's own words to present his case. In view of this, the other very rare instances where the first person occurs on a manorial account do not prove that it was written by the accounting official in person.[47] Of course, where we know that the man in charge of a manor was literate there is no reason why he should not have drawn up his own accounts. The account of John Turk, Fellow of Merton, who managed the Cuxham demesne in the summer of 1356,[48] has not survived, but if it had we might well find it was written in his own hand. At the same time, such a person might have considered writing a manorial account so lowly or so technical a job that it would have to be done by a professional clerk. By the late fourteenth century the obedientiaries of Abingdon Abbey were employing clerks to write their accounts for them.[49] Perhaps the most likely circumstance that could lead to a reeve or bailiff writing his own account would be the appointment of a professional clerk to this office. After all, if Robert Molendinarius had held his house in Cuxham of Merton College and not of its free tenant he would have been eligible to serve as reeve, and in this case would presumably have written his own accounts. A most interesting instance of this occurs on the estates of Burton Abbey (Staffs.) in 1325: new reeves were appointed for the manor of Burton itself and for each of its five members, and of these six men all but one were specifically described as clericus on the court roll recording their election.[50] This cannot have been coincidence; Burton must have been employing clerks as reeves as a deliberate policy, but there is no reason to suppose that this was the practice elsewhere. Still less does it follow that the peasant farmers who normally became reeves were able to read, let alone write, their own annual accounts. The spread of manorial accounting in the late thirteenth century is indeed evidence of the spread of literacy, but what it attests is the growth of a new class of professional clerks in towns and villages throughout the country, not the diffusion of literacy outside their ranks.

Most manorial accounts of Phase 2 reached their final form in three distinct stages:

1. the body of the account was drawn up before the audit took place;
2. additions and alterations were made when the account was audited;
3. further notes and memoranda might be added to the account after the audit.

Usually it is not difficult to distinguish what was written at each stage: the handwriting, the colour of the ink, the spacing of the entries all provide clues, even where it is not self-evident from the nature of the particular entry.[51] In using one of these accounts as historical evidence it is most important that this should be done. A manorial account of Phase 2 was a dynamic record, a dialogue between local agent and auditors. To treat it as a monologue, a statement of the position seen from one point of view only, like most enrolled accounts of Phase 1, is to run a serious risk of misinterpretation. At the beginning of each account published in the present volume a note is given on its compilation, distinguishing as far as possible the work of each stage.

The first stage normally seems to have begun some weeks before the end of the period covered by the account. It may, indeed, have begun much earlier in the year, with the compilation of drafts and views of account; these are discussed in the next chapter. In the final account, however, it is very common to find that entries of receipts and expenses in the last few weeks of the accounting year have been added after the account has been drawn up, though usually in the same hand. On the Cuxham accounts printed here, which mostly close on 25 July, we find that added entries refer not only to events of about that time — the sale of wheat 'immediately before the account'[52] or the entertainment of officials from other manors on their way to or from the audit[53] — but to some a week or more earlier, as on St Margaret's day (20 July)[54] or around St Kenelm's day (17 July)[55] or, on an account closing on 29 September, on the Decollation of St John Baptist (29 August).[56] Not all added entries were last-minute items; some were clearly items from earlier in the year that had been accidentally left out, such as the hayward's harvest wages in 1298–9 or the calf sold in Lent in 1354–5,[57] and as most added entries are undated it is impossible to tell to which category they belong. At least it seems clear that at Cuxham the account was normally drawn up before the end of the financial year and was brought up to date afterwards by additions. The same is true elsewhere: at Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) in 1345–6, for instance, on an account ending on 29 September, entries 'after harvest' and 'in the last week of September'

[51] Sometimes, though, it is difficult or impossible to reconstruct the exact sequence of composition; the Cuxham account for 1290–1 (no. 60) is a case in point. An example of a short and straightforward paragraph that defies explanation of its apparent order of compilation is the account for chicks on no. 74: if the number expended on the king's and prince's men had to be inserted at the audit, how was the original writer able to enter the apparently unaltered number remaining at the end of the year?

are clear additions,[58] while at Boughton Aluph (Kent: Boughton or Burghersh family) in 1341–2 the clerk added entries to the account on three occasions before audit.[59] At Goring (Sussex: Tregoz family) in 1346–7, another account ending on 29 September, the receipts from the manorial court on 9 June were included on the roll as it was first drawn up, those from courts held on 28 July and 22 September were included in a first set of added entries, while later additions include profits of the fair on 17 October, nearly three weeks after the end of the account.[60] Some of the added entries on the Cuxham accounts may relate to events after the end of the financial year; the expenses of the audit in 1288–9 are an example.[61]

It is not surprising that the account should have been drawn up with plenty of time to spare; the Cuxham records twice refer to three days being spent on the task,[62] and this was probably the least time that would be needed to prepare accounts of this length.[63] Simply to transcribe one is a very full day's work, and the medieval clerk had to do very much more than this: he had to collect and marshal the information to be included and had to secure complete internal consistency so that the account would stand up to the auditors' examination. Contemporary treatises on accounting describe some of the checks he had to make — in many ways he acted as intermediary between the reeve or bailiff and the auditors[64] — and surviving accounts show that these checks were carefully carried out. The clerk's chief source for the information presented in the account must have been the reeve or bailiff himself, with his countryman's memory of the events of the past year. The Cuxham records give us an unusual glimpse of this in the first account for 1349, the year of the Black Death to which the reeve fell victim (no. 74): 'he died', the clerk notes in the account of oats, 'before he said anything about the fodder given to the oxen'. The local official's memory would, of course, be aided by the collection of tallies and other notes of receipts and expenses that he had amassed in the course of the year. Most accounts contain many references to these vouchers and sometimes refer to them to supplement the information given in the account.[65] In addition the clerk would have the help of a few written records. He must have had either a copy of the previous year's account or some note of the amounts of cash, corn and stock remaining at the end of the previous year such as would be provided by an indenture of account.[66] He must also have had a note of the profits of each manorial court held in the course of the year; this might be provided by the list of estreats that would be given to the reeve or bailiff so that he could collect the fines and amercements that had been imposed. It is unusual for these lists of estreats to survive, and none is known from Cuxham, though there are references to them in both the accounts and the court rolls;[67] in 1355 and 1358 at least the auditors had the court roll itself before them when they checked the account,[68] and the use of the court rolls in accounting procedures is attested by their own description of courts held in August 1299 and late July 1300 as 'the first after the audit' (nos 95, 100). The clerk would also have a copy of the survey of the demesne that the auditors would use to check the accuracy of the accounts and the honesty of the reeve; at Cuxham the accounts reveal clearly the introduction of a new measured demesne survey in 1318–19.[69] Sometimes some of the information that the clerk needed from the central records of the estate was not available to him when he drew up the account, and in this case we find that gaps [65] One late-13th-century treatise on accounting lists these in its opening sentence: 'Cvm quis compotum ordinare debuerit Primo faciat uenire ante se omnia munimenta balliui et prepositi Tallias Rotulos Memorandas breuia Litteras aquietacione uel tallias aquietacione' (CUL MS. Ee. I. l, f. 231[b]). The form and use of tallies in private accounting are discussed by H. Jenkinson, 'Medieval tallies, public and private', Archaeologia lxxiv (1925), pp. 310–21, and by Oschinsky, Henley, pp. 222–4; they are referred to throughout the accounts printed here, but special mention might be made of (i) reference to the tallies for details of expenditure (no. 62 (visitors' exp., cash liveries, oats)), (ii) the single tally for the expenses of several visits (no. 67 (threshing and winnowing)), (iii) the auditors' disallowance of the cost of writing a tally for corn taken for the king (no. 77 (for. exp.)), (iv) the auditors' disallowance of seed-corn tallied for by the wrong person (no. 81 (wheat)). A written note (billa) might serve the same purpose as a tally; in no. 74 (oats) the fodder for the Warden's horse is vouched for 'by five bille of which one is written inside and outside', and for the steward's horse by a billa indentata, presumably the same as the indenture mentioned elsewhere (as in the malt paragraph of the same account). The writs (brevia) that are sometimes mentioned as authority for payments are discussed, and a very interesting collection from Westminster Abbey printed, in Documents illustrating the rule of Walter de Wenlock, ed. Barbara F. Harvey (Camden 4th ser. ii; 1965), pp. 10–12, 49–154 passim.

Surviving lists of estreats of this sort are found attached to accounts for Maidstone (Kent: archbishop of Canterbury) in 1296–7 and 1299–1300 (Lambeth Palace Lib., estate documents, rolls 657, 658). On the account for Great Stukeley (Hunts.: Camoys fam.) in 1342–3 the auditors have noted that inquiry is to be made in the court why the reeve has not got 'the bag with the rolls' (bagga cum rotulis) (BM Add. were left to insert either single figures or an entire paragraph at the audit.[70] The items most often left out and inserted in this way are the amount of arrears or surplus of cash owing from the last year's account,[71] the profits of the manorial court[72] and the deliveries of cash to the estate owner or his representative;[73] others include the paragraphs for sheep and sales of wool, which were often organised for the estate as a whole,[74] and the payments to hired threshers, which might be under the control of a supervisor sent out to the manor like Robert Molendinarius to Cuxham.[75]

One aid that the clerk must often have had beside him was a specimen account. This might be simply a duplicate or draft of an earlier year's account from the same manor; there is evidence to suggest that Robert of Chalgrove had something of the sort by him when he drew up the accounts for Cuxham.[76] Or it might be a copy of one of the specimen accounts in general circulation, which would at least set out the paragraph headings in their proper form and order and might include rules to be followed in drawing up the account. Something has already been said of these specimen accounts and of the part they played in establishing a uniform pattern of manorial accounting.[77] Certainly they must have been widespread in fourteenth-century England. Of the most popular,

[70] It is difficult to see what central record is being appealed to on no. 61 (geese) where the reeve 'seeks confirmation from the roll' of the number of goslings given in tithe.

[71] E.g. arrears at Launton (Oxon.: Westminster Abbey) in 1267–8 (WAM 15286); surplus at Overbury (Worcs.: Worcester Cathedral Priory) in 1320–1 (mun. D. & C. Worcester C 698).

[72] No. 72 printed here is an example: both the perquisites of court and the amount of pannage (issues of manor paragraph) were left out when the account was drawn up, the latter with a very explicit note: 'Nothing here yet about the pannage of the pigs because the reeve does not know for certain whether the said pannage is in the roll of the court last held as he has not got the estreats'. Similarly at Epworth (Lincs.: owner not identified) in 1421–2 the profits of ten courts, omitted 'for want of the court rolls', were added to the roll as a last-minute addition (BM Add. Roll 67018). Other examples include Knightsbridge (Middx: Westminster Abbey) in 1262–3 (WAM 16368) and Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) in 1343–4 (BM Add. Roll 39532). The late-13th-century anonymous treatise on Husbandry requires the steward to hand in the court rolls after Michaelmas so that the reeves and bailiffs can be duly charged with the perquisites on their accounts (Oschinsky, Henley, pp. 436–7).

[73] E.g. Hurdwick (Devon: Tavistock Abbey) in 1331–2 (Devon Record Office W 1258 M/D52/2/1); Boughton Aluph (Kent: Boughton or Burghersh fam.) in 1341–2 (BM Add. Roll 59433).

[74] E.g. Acton (Middx: St Paul's Cathedral) in 1296–7 (mun. D. & C. St Paul's B/77/21); Titsey (Surrey: Uvedale fam.) in 1357–8 (BM Add. Roll 26893).

[75] E.g. Wonston (Hants.: Winchester Cathedral Priory) in 1260–1 (mun. D. & C. Winchester); Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) in 1380–1 (BM Add. Roll 39536).

[76] This evidence is: (i) the omission of presentbred, from the first Cuxham account he wrote, in 1322–3 (MM 5846), down to 1329–30 (no. 71 (note following cash balance)); (ii) the accidental omission on no. 71, as first drawn up, of the steward's expenses, a paragraph that does not occur on the previous year's account; (iii) the fact that on nos 72 and 73 the dairymaid is referred to as daya in Latin except, on both accounts, in the paragraph for mixed corn, where an English form is used. On draft and duplicate accounts in general see below, pp. 58–62.

known as the 'Forma compoti', only some nine copies are known,[78] but the variations in the text are considerable and can only have arisen through its being copied and re-copied very many times. Whether or not the clerk had direct access to a specimen of this sort when drawing up the account he normally paid very careful attention to the exact ordering of its paragraphs and other rules of accounting. Marginal notes b and a have been added to reverse the sequence of paragraphs on, for instance, the Cuxham accounts for 1296–7 and 1358–9;[79] this can easily be paralleled on series from other manors,[80] while on the account for the Merton College manor of Farleigh (Surrey) in 1277–8 we find the note 'the order of receipts and expenses in this roll should not be blamed on the writer'.[81] At Cuxham the clerk has noted on the account for 1320–1 that heifers 'were added to the cows quicker than they should have been by the order of account'.[82]

The rules given in the specimen accounts told the clerk how to ensure that the various parts of the account balanced correctly, what information he was to give the auditors, and so on, but they said little of the mechanics of setting the information down on the parchment. However, by examining surviving accounts it is not difficult to reconstruct the normal sequence of events. The first step was clearly to mark out the parchment. On both front and dorse a left-hand margin would be needed for the paragraph headings and a vertical centre-line for the totals, and these were nearly always marked in advance, sometimes with a further vertical line about three-quarters of the way across the dorse to align the balance remaining of each sort of corn or stock. In addition some form of horizontal marking would obviously help to keep the lines of writing straight. In thirteenth-century accounts (of Phase 1 as well as Phase 2) these markings were often ruled throughout in ink or pencil; the horizontal lines might be ruled all at once, or piecemeal as the writing of the account proceeded.[83] An alternative, however, was to mark out the parchment by folding. The parchment would be folded vertically in two to mark the centre-line, then the outer edges would be folded again to mark the margins; in the course of writing the clerk would occasionally make a transverse fold in the parchment as a horizontal guide-line, often at the beginning of a new paragraph. Marking by folding can be found in very early manorial accounts,[84] but from the 1290s it became the normal procedure.[85] Of the accounts printed in this volume those from 1288 to 1295 (nos 58–63) seem not to be marked out at all, except perhaps by an occasional horizontal fold, those of 1296–7 and 1297–8 (nos 64, 65) are marked out by vertical and horizontal ruling, and those from 1298–9 onwards (nos 64–85) are fully marked out by folding.

Another step in preparing the parchment was to sew together two or more membranes where, as was normally the case, one was insufficient for the whole account. This was often done before writing began if it was clear that a second membrane would be needed, but sometimes membranes were added as necessary in the course of writing.[86] The method of sewing used on all the Cuxham accounts printed here down to 1353–4[87] was to let one membrane overlap the other by half an inch to an inch, and to sew them loosely together through a single or double series of from ten to twenty widely spaced holes, so that the thread made a pattern usually ∧∧∧ ,[88] but sometimes / / /[89] or – – –.[90] Until 1310 or 1320 this seems to have been the usual method everywhere, but by the 1350s it must have been rather old-fashioned. By then the usual method was that used on the Cuxham accounts after 1354: the two membranes were joined tightly together by oversewing, a neater and more secure method.[91] Either way the thread used was hemp or linen, usually uncoloured; occasionally, as on the Cuxham account for 1356–7 (no. 83), blue thread was used.[92]

Very few accounts show in what order the clerk drew them up. From those that do, however, it seems to have been unusual for the clerk to compile the account in the order in which it was ostensibly meant to be read, i.e. cash account, corn account, stock account. An example is the Cuxham account for 1350–1 (no. 78): Robert of Chalgrove (hand xxiii) wrote the corn account and the first part of the stock account, while the anonymous hand xxvi wrote the rest of the stock account and the whole of the cash account. This suggests (though it does not prove) that the dorse of the account was written first. An account from Melbourn (Cambs.: Argentein family) in 1317–18 points to the same conclusion: the corn account includes at least two successive groups of alterations to the amounts of corn sold (presumably to add amounts sold in the last few weeks of the period of account), but the entries in the cash receipts from sale of corn show no signs of alteration, yet take all these additions into account.[93] This sequence of composition explains why the cash section of the Cuxham account for 1357–8 refers to stock expended at harvest as 'already accounted for outside'.[94] It is not difficult to see why it might be practical for the clerk to start by writing the corn and stock accounts; they provided the detail of sales of stock and corn, threshing by hired labour, and so on, that was repeated in the cash account with valuations, and the reeve or bailiff would probably find it easier to recount the year's events for each sort of corn or stock in turn rather than in terms of the more artificial divisions of the cash account. Where an account provides any evidence of the order in which it was written it nearly always conforms to this pattern.[95] An exception is the Cuxham account for 1290–1, where the last paragraphs of the cash account are entered at the top of the dorse before the beginning of the corn account;[96] but cases such as this, where the cash account seems to have been written first, are very rare.[97] Indeed, when it became customary in the late thirteenth century to place the corn and stock accounts on the dorse of the roll this may have been so that they could be written first without changing the traditional order of the account.[98]

In one important feature the account as the clerk now wrote it differed from its final form: some at least of the totals were omitted, and spaces were left for their insertion at the audit.[99] Taking the Cuxham accounts printed here, we find that on the two written by Robert Molendinarius (hand xxi: nos 67, 68) and also the account for 1288–9 (no. 58) the clerk wrote in all the totals of individual paragraphs throughout the account, leaving blank only the grand totals for charge and discharge of cash and the balance of cash remaining at the end of the account. This can be

[97] The only other example I know is Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) in 1378–9 (BM Add. Roll 39535).

[98] See above, pp. 23–4. The account for Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) in 1343–4 (BM Add. Roll 39532), however, can be shown to have been drawn up in this order although its arrangement is that peculiar to Ramsey: membranes filed Exchequer-fashion, with the account written continuously, front to dorse (reversing the roll). Perhaps it was because this sequence of composition could be used that this form of account roll survived long after the other forms peculiar to Phase 1 had vanished.

[99] As noted by J. S. Drew at Winchester Cathedral Priory; the clerks here were sent from the Priory, not engaged locally, but the account was drawn up and audited on the same pattern (Drew, in EHR lxii (1947), p. 25).

paralleled elsewhere, mostly among the early accounts of Phase 2,[100] but far more usual was the pattern found on all the other accounts in this volume: the clerk omitted also all individual paragraph totals in the cash account, except occasionally those of very short paragraphs that were unlikely to be changed at the audit, such as the arrears from the previous year.[101] On some of the Cuxham accounts a few totals were also omitted on first writing from the corn and stock accounts, probably because there was doubt over some of the entries or because last-minute additions were expected. But none of the accounts printed here was written in the most usual form of all, which left all or most of the totals in both cash and corn accounts to be added at the audit; it was thus only in the stock account that the clerk who wrote the roll filled in totals and balances.[102] It is easy to see why totals were omitted when the account was drawn up. At the audit entries would be added, deleted or altered, and totals entered beforehand would have to be changed accordingly, with consequent untidiness and risk of confusion; and as anyway the arithmetic of the whole account would have to be checked at the audit, there was little point in filling in the totals in advance.[103] Sometimes, however, the clerk who wrote the account would enter preliminary totals in the form of tiny figures in the margin; this occurs on many of the Cuxham accounts — indeed on the account for 1328–9 (no. 70) the auditors let these stand as the final totals and did not fill in the figures in their proper places — but it was not a very common practice.[104] It can be found elsewhere, though, and sometimes the marginal totals were given in arabic figures[105] or in the dot system used by medieval accountants.[106] Another guide to the auditors in working out totals was very much more common: the underlining of figures that were to be excluded from the totals, such as the price per head of livestock sold, or the amount of seed sown per acre in the corn account. This occurs on accounts from the [103] The same system of leaving all totals to be filled in at the audit except the arrears is found on the accounts for entire bailiwicks of the earldom of Cornwall in 1296–7 (Ministers' accts of the earldom of Cornwall (Camden 3rd ser.; 1942–5), i, p. xxxi). Where a paragraph on an account consisted of a single item the total was normally expressed as 'Summa patet', whether by the original writer or by the auditor; the auditor's expression on no. 77 (cash liveries), 'patet quia modicum', was perhaps written down humorously, not for the sake of being explicit.

[104] Other examples include Stockton (Wilts.: Winchester Cathedral Priory) in 1266–7 (mun. D. & C. Winchester) and Flamborough (E.R. Yorks.: Bridlington Priory) in 1351–2 (BM Add. Roll 75469).

mid-thirteenth century on, and in the fourteenth century it was a universal practice.[107]

The account that the reeve or bailiff presented at the audit, then, with Stage 1 of its compilation completed, had been drawn up probably several weeks before. Extra entries had been added in one or more operations to bring it up to date, but most totals in the cash account, perhaps in the corn account as well, had been left blank. Stage 2 of the account's compilation was carried out at the audit. The form of the audit — who were the auditors, whether it was held at a central point or on the particular manor, and so on — varied from one estate to another. But the auditors' work as displayed on surviving accounts followed a very consistent pattern. The most noticeable variation is in the hand that entered the results of the audit on the roll. In most accounts these are in a hand different from the writer of Stage 1 and we may imagine it to be the hand of one of the auditors or of their clerk. But in perhaps a quarter or a third of surviving accounts the hand that entered the auditors' alterations is the hand of the original compiler.[108] There seems no clear pattern in this: practice on a single manor varies from year to year. In the present volume on all the accounts from 1288–9 to 1317–18 (nos 58–67) and from 1354–5 onwards (nos 82–85) Stage 2 of compilation is in the same hand as Stage 1 (as can be seen in Plate I). On most of the other accounts, which include those written by Robert of Chalgrove, we find that the entries of Stage 2 are mostly in a different hand (as in Plate II), but not always; thus, in 1328–9 (no. 70) auditors' alterations in the wheat and white peas paragraphs of the corn account are written by Robert himself, but all others are by someone else. One imagines the account being passed backwards and forwards between the reeve's clerk and the auditors as its various items were discussed, the agreed or imposed alterations being entered by one or another indifferently.[109] Probably the local official was normally accompanied at the audit by his clerk, who would present the account to the auditors; normally, after all, the reeve or bailiff would be unable to read the account himself. What happened at the audit, who [107] Underlining is used on some manorial accounts of Phase 1 to mark acceptance of items at audit (e.g. Clare estates, 1234–7: PRO SC6/1109/6), or their having been copied on another enrolment (e.g. bishop of Winchester, 1259–61: PRO SC6/1142/25, where it probably marks entry on SC6/1143/2) or their cancellation (e.g. Burgh estates, 1232–4: PRO SC6/1117/13). At Halton (Cornw.: Hylle fam.) in 1401–2 it is used by the auditors, logically enough, to mark disallowed items (PRO SC6/822/15). The indenture of harvest expenses from Cuxham in 1351 (no. 51) is very unusual in having underlined the amounts that are to be included in the total, not the ones that are to be left out.

[108] Examples from other estates include accounts for Great Sturton (Lincs.: Darcy fam.) in 1317–18, 1319–20 (BM Add. Rolls 25969, 25970) and Lamberhurst (Kent: Robertsbridge Abbey) from 1370 to 1377 (BM Add. Rolls 71301–71306).

[109] A particularly clear case of the original writer and another hand working together to enter the alterations of the audit is the account for Halsford (Devon: owner not identified) in 1342–3 (Exeter Cathedral Archives, D. & C. Exeter 5120).

entered the alterations made on the account, would depend on the particular circumstances.

The auditors' work was to check the entire account, making sure that all cash and other receipts had been fully entered, that all expenditure was justified and properly authorised, that the produce accounted for was no less than what might reasonably be expected, that losses of corn or stock were not due to fraud or negligence. Then, having satisfied themselves on all these points, they had to check the account's addition, enter any outstanding totals, and agree on the balance of cash and of each sort of corn and stock remaining in the local agent's hands. We find traces of these activities in nearly all surviving accounts of Phase 2: items of expenditure, in cash or kind, have been deleted or reduced, items received have been added or increased.[110] On the cash account these changes could be made in a quite straightforward way: they would be entered before the arithmetic was checked, and if any totals had been filled in already these would be altered accordingly. On the corn and stock accounts the procedure was more complicated. The auditors might decide, say, that the entry of a sheep dead 'by murrain' could not be accepted: it had died through the reeve's or the shepherd's carelessness. But merely removing the entry of its loss from the stock account would not bring the dead animal back to life; unless the account was to depart entirely from reality the animal had to be shown as having gone somehow from the manorial stock. So the auditors would strike out the entry of its loss by murrain, but would add one to the number of sheep sold. This would mean that the number of sheep expended in the year and the number remaining on the manor would remain unchanged, but it would also mean that one sheep would have to be added to the paragraph for sale of stock on the cash account, and by entering it there with a valuation, as though it were an actual sale, the value of the animal would be charged against the reeve and taken into account in the final balance of cash. This procedure was followed for disallowance of any sort of corn or stock. One corollary was that it was more convenient for auditors to deal with the corn and stock accounts before examining the front of the account, since any disallowance of corn or stock would produce alterations in the cash; and that this was their procedure can be demonstrated when we find that these 'sales' of disallowed items have already been entered and taken into account when the paragraph or other totals were filled in on the cash account. The manorial account thus presents the odd phenomenon of a document that was normally both written and used in an order different from that implied and intended by its form.[111]

[110] It is unusual to find manorial accounts of Phase 2 that show no alterations at all on audit, but examples are accounts from Werrington (Devon: Tavistock Abbey) in 1297–8 (Devon Record Office, W 1258 M/D71/1) and Downham (Cambs.: bishop of Ely) in 1302 (Ely diocesan records (deposited in CUL), D 10/2/1).

Several of the early Cuxham accounts printed here use this method to deal with items disallowed from the corn and stock accounts. On the account for 1328–9 (no. 70), however, and on many of the later accounts, we find a more elegant adaption of the system that had long been in use elsewhere. These fictitious sales of disallowed items of corn or stock were sometimes referred to as sold 'at the audit' (super compotum);[112] there now appeared a special paragraph at the end of the receipts of cash, but before their grand total, headed 'Sales at the audit' (Venditiones super compotum) and here all these items were entered together instead of being dispersed among the sales of stock or corn. The clerk would leave a gap for this paragraph when the account was first compiled — sometimes he would even enter its marginal heading — but the items would of course be entered only at the audit (see Plate II). Sometimes the items were listed individually in this special paragraph, sometimes they were all covered by a single entry: 'In various things sold at the audit'. Very often the corn and stock accounts bear further traces of this procedure in the shape of a marginal mark, usually '3' or '3:', opposite each entry of an item 'sold at the audit'[113] and a valuation added either in the margin or as part of the entry of the fictitious sale.[114] These would be entered by the auditors as they went through the dorse of the account, so as to make it easy to collect all these items together in the 'Sales at the audit' paragraph when they turned to the cash account. The system of fictitious sales was first [111] Manorial accounts are very seldom arranged in the more rational order of corn, stock, cash; examples, however, are accounts of Eastry (Kent: Canterbury Cathedral Priory) for 1264–5, 1267–8 and 1275–6 (Canterbury Cathedral Chapter Archives, Bedels' Rolls) and a view of account from Soham (Suff.: Bigod fam.) in 1268–9 (PRO SC6/1004/1). The earliest accounts from Eastry, in 1261–2 and 1262–3, also open with the corn account, but follow this with the cash account, an arrangement that can be paralleled on accounts for Caxton and Morden (Cambs.: Colne or Frevill fam.) in the early 1250s (PRO SC6/765/16).

[112] In the Word-list, under compot', I have entered only cases where the word bears unambiguously the hitherto unrecorded meaning of audit; I do not doubt, however, that this is its significance in the very common phrase super compotum, rather than the usual, but less meaningful, translation 'over the account'.

[113] Occasionally other symbols are used for the same purpose: / at Combe (Hants.: Bec Abbey) in 1305–6 (muniments of King's Coll., Cambridge, Ministers' accts before the time of the Coll.); ‖ at Whitchurch (Hants.: Winchester Cathedral Priory) in 1325–6 (mun. D. & C. Winchester); 9 at Halsford (Devon: owner not identified) in 1342–3 (Exeter Cathedral Archives, D. & C. Exeter 5120). Likewise the 3 sign is sometimes put to a different use: (i) on the outside of most accounts of God's House Hospital, Southampton, between 1304 and 1319, perhaps to show that the account had been audited (muniments of the Queen's Coll., Oxford (deposited in Bodl.), R 8–14, 17, 191, 193–200, 202–204, 245–251, 253); (ii) to mark the monthly headings of the household accounts for the same Hospital in 1328–9 (ibid., R 257); (iii) to mark balances on the corn account for Calthorpe (Norf.: St Giles' Hospital, Norwich) in 1338–9 (BM Add. Roll 27456).

[114] Sometimes the 3 sign is used without a valuation being given on the dorse, as at Lamberhurst (Kent: Robertsbridge Abbey) in 1323–4 (BM Add. Roll 71300), sometimes valuations are given without any marginal marks, as at Flamborough (E. R. Yorks.: Bridlington Priory) in 1356–7 (BM Add. Roll 75471), but usually the two are found together.

described in 1947 by J. S. Drew from the accounts of Winchester Cathedral Priory, records that not only demonstrate extraordinarily well the development of the system but are among the earliest on which it appears: sales at the audit were entered on the accounts there from 1248, though they were not placed in a special paragraph in the cash account until 1311.[115] The system appears in an early form on the accounts from other Winchester estates: on the bishop's manor of Highclere in 1258–9 and the St Mary's Abbey manor of Froyle in 1259–60.[116] It appears too on the accounts of Adam de Stratton's manor of Sevenhampton (Wilts.) by 1269–70[117] and by 1279–80 we find it fully developed on the archbishop of Canterbury's manors of Bexley and Maidstone, with special paragraph on the cash account and marginal marks and valuations on the dorse.[118] By the time it appeared in this form at Cuxham in 1301–2[119] it had been widely adopted.

Not all the alterations made on the account at Stage 2 represented a conflict of opinion or of interest between local agent and auditors. Many represented merely formal changes in the presentation of the account or in the method by which the reeve or bailiff was to be repaid for certain expenditure. Thus, at Cuxham from 1330–1 onwards we find the auditors altering the entries of certain sorts of stock delivered to Merton College to make them appear as sales to an outside person;[120] this signified simply a change in the College's accounting system. Nor were the entries made on the account at the audit restricted to changes in the items of receipt and expenditure and the addition of totals. Very often a note would be added to explain a particular decision, or by way of a reminder for the next year's account: 'allowed this year', 'in future the dairymaid shall winnow half of all the corn',[121] 'left out because elsewhere, as above',[122] 'in future food is to be given only during harvest',[123] and so on. One set of notes very commonly added to accounts at the audit — they occur on perhaps half of all accounts of Phase 2 — was an entry of the yield of each type of corn: the increase on comparing the amount threshed in the current year with the amount sown the year before. The figures would be entered in the margin of the corn account.[124] Yield figures appear on accounts from Winchester from the late 1250s;[125] there and elsewhere they formed the basis for an increasingly rigid check on corn production, and eventually what came to be entered was not the actual yield calculated from the account but a minimum acceptable yield, so that if the account actually fell short of this the difference could be charged against the reeve or bailiff as a fictitious sale.[126] At Cuxham yields are entered on the accounts for 1303–4[127] and 1327–8 (no. 69); thenceforward yield figures are entered fairly regularly, but usually only for wheat.[128] A final group of entries added to the roll in Stage 2 represents the settlement at the end of the audit taking the form of notes following the first cash balance. Sometimes these allowed on appeal amounts that had been disallowed or charged as fictitious sales,[129] sometimes they recorded cash payments handed over to the auditors in partial or total settlement of the account;[130] in either case they would be followed by a new cash balance, 'And thus he owes net . . .' (Et sic debet de claro . . .).

These entries made at the end of the audit are sometimes followed by notes of further payments and a new balance. These belong to Stage 3 of the compilation of the roll: additions after the audit that might be made at any time during the next year. These further notes do not occur on all account rolls; many remain unchanged from the state in which they emerged from the audit, with nothing added to them beyond, perhaps, the name of the manor and the year at the head of the dorse for easy identification when placed among other records. But on some accounts further payments and other memoranda were recorded. For instance at the Ramsey Abbey manor of Broughton (Hunts.) in 1312 we find this note following the cash balance: 'From which afterwards, in allowance to the said reeve, 12*s.* which he paid in the Chamber (camera) by two tallies, not allowed earlier, for the wardship of the son and heir of John Gocelyne.

[124] On the view of account at Syleham (Suff.: Bigod fam.) in 1273–4 (PRO SC6/751/7), which has no stock account, the corn yields are given together in a list at the end of the corn account. At Norwich Cathedral Priory at the end of the 13th century calculations of yield were made in terms both of return on seed sown and the amount yielded per acre (Saunders, Norwich, plate facing p. 11); this latter system appears at Oakington (Cambs.: Crowland Abbey) in 1361–2 (Page, Crowland, pp. 274–6) and at Broughton (Hunts.: Ramsey Abbey) from 1380–1 (BM Add. Rolls 39536, 39538, 39539).

And thus the reeve still owes the lord £15. 2*s.* 7¾*d.*'.[131] Or at Little Hinton (Wilts.), a manor of Winchester Cathedral Priory, in 1267: 'To be remembered that 35*s.* 5*d.* from lambs sold last year, not included in the roll, remains in the hands of John the reeve for buying sheep for the demesne stock next year'.[132] Many of the Cuxham accounts printed here bear notes of this sort added at the end of the cash account: those for 1318–9, 1327–8 and 1349–50 (nos 68, 69, 77) may be mentioned as providing varied examples.

But perhaps the most interesting addition to account rolls at Stage 3 is the note of the manor's profit during the year.[133] From its appearance this seems normally to have been added after the audit,[134] though sometimes in the same hand as the auditor's alterations where these were not entered by the local clerk. On the Cuxham accounts the profit was entered in 1291–2 (no. 61) and every year from 1297–8 to 1308–9, but then only occasionally, on nine accounts in all between 1313–14 and 1354–5.[135] There it was normally called profectus or proficuum, but elsewhere other words were used as well, such as clarum,[136] comod',[137] valor,[138] waynagium,[139] or the phrase Manerium valet hoc anno;[140] on some estates, a distinction was drawn between the profectus or proficuum, the total profits of the manor, and the wainagium, the profits of demesne agriculture.[141] More work needs to be done on these records of manorial profits as calculated by the landlords, though from the accounts of Canterbury and Norwich Cathedral Priories Dr E. Stone has amply demonstrated both the increasing complexity of the calculations and their influence on landlords' decisions to lease their manors or run them in demesne.[142] Very rarely indeed account rolls give evidence of the methods of calculation. The notes on the account for Bridlington Priory's manor of Flamborough in 1341–2 show a calculation of profit simply from amounts of cash delivered from the manor;[143] accounts from Winchester Cathedral Priory in the late thirteenth century include paragraphs giving valuations of produce delivered to the Priory on which more elaborate calculations may have been based.[144] It has been suggested earlier that the wish to calculate and record profits may have been one reason for the introduction of written manorial accounts.[145] At the same time it must be admitted that it is relatively uncommon to find a note of profit on a manorial account. Where one was entered, however, it marked the last significant stage in the compilation of a manorial account: with its entry the account was complete.

5. FINAL ACCOUNTS AND SUBSIDIARY RECORDS: FORM AND DEVELOPMENT

The last chapter described how a manorial account was compiled and it was assumed there that the document surviving in the estate owner's archives is the account as first drawn up, not a fair copy made from an earlier draft. In a few cases, however, draft accounts do survive. From Cuxham besides the draft of the earliest surviving reeve's account, for 1276 (no. 30), we have drafts as well as the final copies of the accounts for the five years 1303–7 and 1308–9.[1] These Cuxham draft accounts give slightly more detail than the fair copies and although the order of paragraphs is mostly the same the order of entries in each paragraph is often much less systematic.[2] This is because they were made up not at a single operation at the end of the accounting year, but in several stages as the year progressed. On the Cuxham draft account for 1303–4, for instance,[3] the cash account was first set out about Michaelmas, leaving wide gaps between the paragraphs for further entries, which were added in successive stages in February or March, late April or early May, and soon after 16 July, when the paragraph totals were filled in; the corn account, on the other hand, was first entered in the spring or early summer with additions made in July, while the stock account seems to have been written in a single operation at the end of the year with the addition of only two last-minute items. The fair copy was drawn up at a single operation, apart from two added entries dated 16 and 17 July;[4] these two entries were also added to the draft, but the various changes made to the fair copy at the audit, including the addition of the cash balance and a paragraph of 'sales at the audit', do not appear there. The other Cuxham draft accounts follow the same pattern, though the various stages of compilation seem to have been very flexible. Thus the next year, 1304–5,[5] both cash and corn were first entered on the draft in mid-January and brought up to date in late February, in April, possibly in May, and finally in early July when the paragraph totals were entered; the stock account was again written up as a single operation at the end of the year.

The Cuxham draft account for 1304–5 distinguishes in some paragraphs between items arising before and after the view of account. The view of account was an inspection of the local official's receipts and expenditure made partway through the accounting year, and a preliminary short-term account roll might be written for the occasion. There survive many more written views of account of this sort than draft final accounts, and as the two types of record are related it may be helpful to examine views of account at this point. They survive from the whole of the period covered by the second phase of manorial accounting. Sometimes they include a stock account,[6] but more often they consist simply of cash and corn accounts,[7] or even of a cash account alone;[8] occasionally, though, there is a memorandum of the stock or corn on the manor if these are omitted from formal account.[9] Sometimes the view of account is an obvious fair copy, written at a single operation, but more often, perhaps, it seems to have been drawn up in stages like a draft account. The Cuxham view of account for 1276–7 (no. 31) was even adapted after completion to a different terminal date — 16 May instead of 23 April — while on one from Syleham (Suff.: Bigod family) in 1268–9 the closing date was brought forward from 8 May to 28 April;[10] presumably these represent last-minute changes in the date fixed for the view. Usually views of account are simple statements of the position at the time and bear no alterations corresponding to the work of the audit, Stage 2 in the compilation of the final account. A very few, however, show modifications that reflect the comments of the officials who made the view; additions even occur of items 'sold at the view' (in vendicione super visum), fictitious sales of corn when expenditure was disallowed, corresponding to the 'sales at the audit' of a final account.[11] A much fuller investigation would be needed to establish the place of the view of account in the management of an estate and its relationship to the final account and audit,[12] but enough has been said to show that written views of account are less formal, less regular in style and content, and less uniform in method of composition than the final annual accounts.[13] This raises the strong presumption that the view of account was of less universal occurrence than the annual audit. The paucity of written views of account among surviving manorial account rolls supports this, though of itself it is not conclusive evidence, [12] On the Wiltshire lands of Adam de Stratton in the 1270s the view was held about Easter, when the accounts of the previous year, ending at Michaelmas, were audited (Stratton accts, p. xxxvi); on the bishop of Winchester's estates in the early 13th century the audit was usually held in October and the view probably in February, but here, as elsewhere, more than one view was sometimes made in the course of the year (Winch. P.R. 1210–11, p. xix; Wellingboro accts, p. 131).

for the view was at best a temporary statement, of no value once the final account was prepared, and normally would then be thrown away. Another indication is that expenses of the view are rarely found entered on account rolls, though an example occurs at Cuxham in 1357–8, twenty years later than the last written view surviving from this manor.[14] Admittedly Walter of Henley is as emphatic on the need for a view halfway through the year as on the need for the final audit;[15] but he was probably not thinking in terms of written accounts at all, and it might well be that even when written manorial accounts became general the view was often taken without a written record.

Where the local clerk did draw up a written view of account, this may have been merely inspected by the visiting officials or a copy may have been prepared for them to keep; in the former case it would be natural for the clerk to use the view as a preliminary draft for the final account, in the latter case it would be a necessity, since the auditors would check the final account against their copy of the view. Sometimes the clerk may have added to the view so as to turn it into a draft for the final account; it is significant here that on the Cuxham drafts for 1303–4 and 1304–5 the stock account, usually omitted from a view, was filled in at the end of the year. But it was probably unusual for the final account to be prepared from any form of full draft.[16] If in making the final account the clerk had merely to re-arrange and copy an existing draft, we should have expected him to do this at the very end of the financial year so that no more than one or two entries need be added later, just as we find on the Cuxham account for 1303–4. In fact, as we have seen, the account might well be compiled some little time in advance and many entries added subsequently. More conclusively, if the final account were merely a fair copy it would be difficult to see why its dorse was normally written first; there would be no reason why it should not be written out in a more natural order, starting with the cash account. Internal evidence suggests that the Cuxham accounts for 1291–2 and 1293–4 (nos 61, 62, both written by hand xii) were prepared from drafts, although these have not survived,[17] and it is significant that the account for 1290–1, written by the same hand, Harvey in AgricHR xx (1972), p. 177), requires a reeve to draw up an account on parchment every month (Historia et cartularium monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestriae, ed. W. H. Hart (Rolls Ser.; 3v., 1863–7), iii, p. 213). This can seldom, if ever, have occurred in practice; like other rulings in the same treatise it corresponds rather to a bureaucrat's dream of how a manor might be run than to the realities of agrarian life revealed in other records.

is one of the very rare instances of an account on which it can be shown that the cash account on the front was written first.[18]

Where a full draft was prepared, this would presumably not be handed over at the audit with the final account, but, if it was kept at all, would be retained by the local agent or his clerk to help in compiling the next year's account.[19] Sometimes, indeed, a duplicate account was handed over at the audit; this seems occasionally to have been the practice on certain estates, such as Westminster Abbey, Winchester Cathedral Priory and God's House Hospital, Southampton.[20] But in these cases the duplicate roll was a fair copy, not a draft. Where a draft survives it was probably chance circumstance that brought it into the estate's central records. This may well have been the case with the five draft accounts for Cuxham from 1303 to 1309: the reeve, Robert Beneyt, died in 1311, and they probably were taken over by the College on his death.[21] The views of account for 1301–2 and 1302–3 may well be part of the same series: preliminary accounts which in these cases the clerk did not extend as drafts for the whole year (in 1302, when the view was dated 11 June, there would have been little to add). Between them, these documents cover most of the years when Robert Beneyt's accounts were drawn up by Robert Molendinarius.[22] Similar circumstances may explain the survival of one draft and two views between 1276 and 1279, for in 1277 and 1279 new reeves took office.[23] Where an account covering a short period survives it can be very difficult to tell whether it is the view of account handed over to the visiting officials, the draft or copy of this kept by the clerk, or a draft account drawn up for some other purpose; in the normal course of events none of these would survive and, as we have seen, there need be no real distinction between a view and a draft. The exact status of the four short-term accounts from Cuxham between 1333 and 1337, listed as views

[19] Where the account was written by a clerk sent to the manor by the estate owner, as normal in Phase 1, he might well take the previous year's account with him to serve as a model; this seems to have been the case at Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester), where, for instance, in 1241–2 the 'Necessary expenses' paragraph was divided into two sections because the previous year a break in membranes had made a similar division necessary (BM Add. Rolls 17461, 17462). But where the account was written by a local clerk, as normal in Phase 2, he would not have the previous year's account available unless he had kept a draft or a copy. For Robert of Chalgrove's use of a precedent of this sort see above, p. 46.

[20] Those for Silkstead and Wonston (Hants.) in 1323–4 (mun. D. & C. Winchester) are clear examples. The practice may have been more common than the few surviving examples suggest: such duplicate accounts would be obvious candidates for destruction in any early weeding of archives.

[21] Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 64.

[22] Robert Molendinarius may well have kept (or been given) drafts of the accounts for 1309–10 and for July 1310–Jan. 1311 for his own future use.

in Appendix I, is far from certain,[24] and this is not unusual with records of this sort.

We have seen how on the Cuxham draft account for 1303–4 the clerk copied in none of the alterations made on the final account at the audit.[25] If he was keeping the draft as an aid in drawing up the next year's account it may seem odd that he did not enter at least the cash balance and any changes affecting the remainder of any sort of corn or stock; in fact this was not necessary, as this information would be entered on the indenture of account. Fifteen of these documents survive from Cuxham dating from 1277 to 1348, most of them attached to the foot of the year's account roll. They are known from other Merton College manors, and, very exceptionally, from other estates as well,[26] but they may well have been a normal feature of manorial accounting and merely have chanced to survive on this one estate.[27] The indenture of account listed the balance of cash and of each sort of corn and stock remaining on the manor at the end of the account; it was indented, and the counterpart was presumably kept by the reeve or bailiff as evidence of what he was to answer for on the next account. This part may have been sealed; that kept by the College was not. In 1296 we find the indenture of account being used instead of the foot of the account roll for the entry of an overlooked item,[28] but this seems to have been exceptional. It is possible that indentures of account are a relic of the first phase of manorial accounting, and of rendering accounts orally: where an annual written account was drawn up, the indenture would serve little purpose, but in the absence of a written account some [24] That for July–Dec. 1333 (MM 5859) does not call itself a visus, but is referred to thus in that for Dec. 1333–May 1334 (MM 5860).

[25] Thus, the 'Sales at the audit' paragraph does not appear on the draft (cf. the relationship between original account and enrolled copy at Sevenhampton, Stratton accts, p. xxxvi). But, oddly, notes of crop yields, normally added at the audit, are entered on the draft account for 1303–4 (MM 5824) but not on the fair copy (MM 5823); this is the only Cuxham account on which yields are noted before 1327–8.

[26] One from Leatherhead in 1283 is described and printed in Surrey accts, pp. xxxviii, 42–3. One from Flamborough (E.R. Yorks.: Bridlington Priory) in 1352 survives attached to BM Add. Roll 75469. Indentures listing the stock and equipment on the manor at the end of the financial year are attached to accounts from Merstham (Surrey: Canterbury Cathedral Priory) from 1281 on (Canterbury Cathedral Chapter Archives, Bedels' Rolls); these are perhaps related rather to manorial inventories, as described below.

[27] Just as lists of estreats, drawn up everywhere, seldom survive (see above, p. 45). It is probably to indentures of account that treatises of the 'Forma compoti' group refer when they tell the clerk to check the pes compoti to discover the amounts of corn in hand at the beginning of the financial year (Leg. man. form., p. 36; St Catherine's Coll., Cambridge, MS. G. V. 69, f. 77^{b}).

[28] Neither the account for 1295–6 nor the indenture survives, but the entry of this item is mentioned in the arrears paragraph on the account for 1296–7 (no. 64), where the indenture is referred to as the reeve's dividenda.

record would be needed, acceptable to both parties, of what the reeve or bailiff was answerable for at the close of the audit.[29]

Similar to the indenture of account, but more commonly found, is the indenture made by the estate owner with an incoming reeve or bailiff, listing the stock and equipment that were given into his keeping. From Cuxham there is a rudimentary list of stock in 1279 (no. 37) that may have been a record of this sort, and a fuller and more formal indenture of 1349 (no. 48); this was made with a bailiff who died a few weeks later, probably in the Black Death, and it was then adapted for his successor. An alternative that does not appear at Cuxham is a similar indenture between the outgoing and incoming officials.[30] These indentures of stock and equipment may well have been carried over from the earlier leasing of estates, when the list of what was on the manor was sometimes incorporated in the lease.[31] On many estates the change of a manorial official seems to have been the occasion for making an inventory of the stock and equipment, whether or not this was to be the subject of an indenture, and this practice too probably arose from the need to make an inventory when a lease terminated;[32] elsewhere inventories covering all or part of an estate might be made on arbitrary occasions.[33] The list of equipment at the end of the Cuxham account roll of 1358–9 (no. 85) was clearly in the nature of an inventory made on the change of official, for the manor was about to be transferred from a bailiff to a lessee, but the lists at the end of the accounts for 1288–9 and 1289–90 (nos 58, 59) are instances of the practice of appending such a list as a regular item of a manorial account. Although this practice can be found in some places in the mid-fourteenth century,[34] it seems to have been more usual early in Phase 2 of manorial accounting;[35] it does not seem to have persisted

[29] Even if (as suggested above, p. 31) the cash and corn accounts in the days of oral accounting were usually settled without carrying a balance over to the next year, a record of the livestock in hand would still be needed; in this connection the stock and equipment indentures at Canterbury Cathedral Priory may be significant (see above, n. 26).

[30] An example from Ogbourne St Andrew (Wilts.: Bec Abbey) in 1334 is in the muniments of King's Coll., Cambridge, Ministers' accts before the time of the Coll.

[31] Notably in the 12th-century leases of St Paul's manors (Dom. St Paul's, pp. 122–39); in the 14th and 15th centuries it was common practice to append or attach an inventory of stock to the lease of a manor, as at Cuxham in 1420, 1424 and 1472 (MM 3002, 2856, 1874).

[32] An inventory attached to the account for Flamborough (E.R. Yorks.: Bridlington Priory) in 1347–8 was made when the Cellarer returned the manor to the Prior and Convent (BM Add. Roll 75466).

[33] Those made at Norwich Cathedral Priory in 1352 are examples (Saunders, Norwich, p. 13); others are the inventory of livestock on the manors of Hyde Abbey, Winchester, in 1282 (Winchester Coll. muniments, 12192), and the visitation of five manors on the estates of St Paul's Cathedral in 1334 (mun. D. & C. St Paul's A/52/1).

long on any estate, and its appearance and disappearance at Cuxham may be taken as typical.

A far more usual appendage to the stock account was a works account, dealing with tenants' labour services due on the demesne; it is found on perhaps a quarter or a fifth of all surviving manorial accounts of Phase 2, and seems a little more common on later accounts than on earlier ones.[36] Indeed, in some places the works account became so established a feature of manorial accounting that it persisted into Phase 3, and appears on manors where no demesne remained in the lords' hands so that all works have to be accounted as sold.[37] It first appears, however, in the mid-thirteenth century: there is one on a slip of parchment attached to the Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester) account for 1252–3, and though this is not repeated in the following years a note added to the account for 1259–60 states that 'The bailiff and reeve were ordered to answer for the works on the next visit of the steward'.[38] Works accounts were included on the most widely used specimen account rolls, but in practice their style varied a good deal from one manor to another; in all but the earliest examples the works due at harvest were usually accounted separately from the rest,[39] but the sub-division is sometimes carried much further, so that at Hainford (Norf.) in 1363–4 the works account consists of nine paragraphs, for winter works, muck-carting, filling the muck-cart, carrying-services, threshing, ploughing, hoeing, harvest works and works after the harvest.[40] Normally the works account follows the stock account on the dorse of the roll, but there are cases where it is written between the corn and stock accounts[41] or before the corn account.[42] From Cuxham only two works accounts survive, from 1330–1 and 1332–3 (nos 42, 43). Both were written on separate membranes and were attached to the account rolls by strips of parchment, not sewn on, and they seem to be an afterthought or supplement, not an integral part of the account. Despite the early precedent of the Froyle account of 1252–3, with the works entered on a separate schedule, this was an unusual arrangement; probably it was an experiment that was not persisted in.

Much less commonly a land account follows the stock account, listing the lands of the demesne under the headings of arable (sometimes subdivided) and meadow, and showing how they were used during the year. This was a late development; it had appeared by 1361–2 on the Crowland Abbey manors in Cambridgeshire and it first occurs in 1380–1 on the Ramsey Abbey manor of Broughton (Hunts.).[43] It does not occur at all on the Cuxham accounts.

The introduction of land accounts and the increasing use of works accounts both reflect a continuation of the same trend that we saw in the change from the first to the second phase of manorial accounting: giving more and more responsibility to the local reeve or bailiff, relying not so much on close supervision to keep a check on his operations as on detailed written records and rigorous auditing. Eventually this trend led on most manors to the end of demesne farming and to a general return to leasing. It is clearly evident in the contents of manorial accounts during the first half of the fourteenth century; it appears where they reveal predetermined returns of corn and stock that were bringing the reeve or bailiff nearer and nearer to becoming a lessee, and it appears too in the increasing tendency to attach valuations to items of produce sent to the estate's household, so that they appear as sales rather than as simple deliveries.[44] But the same trend is equally evident in developments in the form of manorial accounts in the course of Phase 2. Some changes that occur, certainly, are unrelated to this trend. There is, for instance, a move towards simple rationalisation, as in abandoning special paragraphs to separate multure from other receipts of corn or rents in kind from the same items of stock received in other ways. And there is too a continuing move towards greater regularity and greater formality of presentation that can be very well illustrated by the work of the successive clerks who wrote the Cuxham accounts. But most other changes in the form of manorial accounts between 1270 and 1350 are clearly related to the increasing dependence on these written records as the principal link between the local agent and the central organisation of the estate.

The most obvious of these changes is the ever-increasing detail given by manorial accounts. This usually appears not in expansion into new areas of accountancy, such as a works account or land account, but rather in more complete accounts of cash, corn and stock. In all parts of the record more information was given as time went on; at Cuxham, for instance, the stacks from which the wheat came for threshing were first identified in 1294–5 (no. 63) and the amount of each sort of corn sown per acre was first noted in 1298–9 (no. 66). One aspect of this was a larger number of paragraphs in the account, some in the cash account, though the structure of this had been fairly well developed during Phase 1, but many more in the stock account. This may be illustrated by comparing the Cuxham accounts with those of two other manors:

The table shows how an increase in the headings in the cash account was followed by an increase in the separate items of stock accounted for. In both cases this reflected more detailed classification, such as the entry of young stock in separate paragraphs from the adults, but in the stock account it also resulted from a real increase in the number of items that the reeve or bailiff had to account for. The slight reduction in the number of headings on all three manors after the first quarter of the fourteenth century was due to rationalisation and re-amalgamation of headings rather than to any reversal of this trend. Indeed, the number of accountable items tended to increase steadily; oats-flour and salt first appeared on the corn account at Cuxham in 1350–1 (no. 78), while hives of bees were first accounted for at Cuxham in the same year and at Flamborough in 1351–2.[48] The items of stock accounted for naturally enough reflected the economy and financial interests of the particular manor, but on some their number and variety was astonishing. At Northney (Cambs.: Ely Cathedral Priory) for instance, a dairy-farm on the edge of the Fens, we find the stock account in 1344–5 closing with paragraphs for butter, cream and milk (Creem et lac), cheese, willows, faggots, turves, sedge (Lechia), small hay (Minutum fenum) and large hay (Grossum fenum).[49] There are separate paragraphs for tiles, corner-tiles and crest-tiles at Boughton Aluph (Kent: Boughton or Burghersh family) in 1341–2, and for the manor-house's brass bowls and table-cloths at Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester) in 1363–4 and 1365–6.[50] At Halsford (Devon) in 1342–3 there is a paragraph for hurdles, showing the number made during the year and how they were used, and another for the feathers that were a product of the peacocks listed among the poultry.[51]

Sometimes we find attached to a manorial account a small slip of parchment, or schedule, setting out full details of some items that had been omitted or entered in abridged form when the account was drawn up. At Cuxham in 1304–5 the unthreshed oats given to the horses and oxen in the course of the year are listed in very great detail on a schedule of this sort attached to the draft account,[52] and in 1351 a schedule, now lost, gave details of rents paid by the tenants, whose number had been reduced by the plague of 1349.[53] Examples from the records of St Paul's are the expenses of the sheep-flock attached to the account for Acton in 1296–7, and mill expenses attached to the 1318 account for Stepney;[54] an account from Gisleham (Suff.: Biskele family) for 1318–19 has attached to it lists of people who had borrowed corn from the manor and of livestock in outside custody.[55] In some cases the schedule served as a voucher, corroborating the local official's account of some particular expenditure, and schedules of this sort became more usual in the course of the second phase of manorial accounting.[56] The lists of estreats from the manorial courts, attached to accounts from the archbishop of Canterbury's estates, are an early example of this;[57] a much later one is the lists of tenants attached to the accounts of the Ramsey Abbey manor of Broughton from 1378–9 onwards.[58] At Cuxham we have an example of this sort of schedule in the indentures of harvest expenses, of which there are five in all: four are attached to accounts dating from 1328–9 to 1351–2, while the fifth, relating to the harvest of 1355, survives as a separate document (the account roll for 1355–6 does not survive).[59] These indentures, which are not sealed, were made between reeve or bailiff and the official who came to the manor to supervise the harvest to serve as the local agent's receipt for the money spent on the harvest in food, wages and tips; the first three (harvests of 1328, 1332, 1346) arrange the costs by subject, wages first then corn and stock expended, but the last two (1351, 1355) partly follow a chronological arrangement, giving the expenses week by week in the manner of a household account. Presumably the reeve or bailiff always presented this indenture among his vouchers at the audit, whether or not it was attached to the account; from 1344–5 onwards most of the Cuxham accounts give a mere total of harvest expenses, referring to the indenture for the details. Comparable schedules of harvest expenses can be found attached to accounts elsewhere.[60]

One feature already mentioned of the second phase of manorial accounting was that it became the universal practice to carry a cash balance forward from one year to the next. It is very common on fourteenth-century manors to find the reeve or bailiff falling more and more into debt to the owner of the estate. This was not so much evidence of increasing oppression by manorial lords as a further sign of the growing responsibility of the local agent. The Cuxham records show that the mounting debts were closely balanced by sums owing to the reeve from other sources; some of these sums were due from his fellow-villagers, but many were due from royal officers for goods purveyed and other services for which it was the reeve's, not the College's, responsibility to collect payment.[61] The evidence for this is five lists of the reeve's debtors, dating from 1333 to 1349 and attached as schedules to the relevant accounts.[62] The College may have kept watch on the money owing to the reeve to assure itself that his financial position was sound and that he would not default in his own debt to the College; in the thirteenth century Walter of Henley had urged the need to enquire into the local agent's debtors for this very reason.[63] But the lists do show that the College had not yet resigned to the reeve all its local financial responsibilities, and was still prepared to accept (after due lapse of time) the bad debts that he had incurred on its behalf. These lists are a very unusual type of record but the attitude that they display was probably not uncommon. It appears on certain manors when one reeve or bailiff took over from another. At Cuxham, except in the unusual circumstances of the plague year, 1349, the account would be closed and the incoming official would start with a clean sheet. But in many places the new official would take over his predecessor's cash debt to the estate owner, just as he would take over responsibility for the corn and the stock outstanding on the account; this was probably the custom on those manors where the reeve was changed every year. But the estate owner would often keep careful track of the exact amount each past official owed, even though it appeared as the formal debt of the present incumbent. Thus the account for 1348–9 of the hayward (messor) of Palgrave (Suff.: Bury St Edmunds Abbey) opens with arrears due from his predecessors for the two previous years.[64] It would be hazardous to argue that this was not done where the local agent changed in the course of the accounting year with no note of division of financial responsibility, as at Kintbury (Berks.: Nuneaton Priory) in 1360–1;[65] such division may well have been made on some schedule or other memorandum now lost.[66]

One change that reflects increasing strictness of auditing is the development of petitions for allowances as a regular feature of the manorial account. On many accounts of Phase 2 the cash balance is followed by a note, entered at the audit, of sums allowed to the reeve or bailiff that enabled his debt to be reduced and a new balance entered; these allowances might be the restoration of expenses that had been disallowed, payments for special services or items overlooked on the account. Clearly when the balance was struck the local official would bring up various items for reconsideration by way of appeal; some would be allowed and entered thus on the account, others no doubt would fail and the appeal would go unrecorded. These entries after the cash balance first appear at Cuxham on the account for 1297–8 (no. 65), and are fairly frequent from 1305–6 on. They appear in a very fully developed form on mid-fourteenth-century accounts from Winchester: at Froyle (Hants.: St Mary's Abbey) in 1365–6 a paragraph headed 'Allowances without writ' was added on the audit (with the paragraphs for forinsec payments and cash liveries) at the end of the cash account before the balance was struck, and on the bishop's manor of Hambledon (Hants.) in 1354–5 there are two such paragraphs, for 'Allowances without writ' and 'Allowances with writ'.[67] But this was only one aspect of the development of these entries. On the account for Maidstone (Kent: archbishop of Canterbury) in 1279–80 the final entry of the cash expenses reads, without a marginal heading: 'Likewise he seeks to be allowed from various tenements(?) of James Gauelate 4*s.* 7½*d.*';[68] and at Great Sturton (Lincs.: Darcy family), the account for 1317–18 concludes the cash expenses with a paragraph headed 'Petitions'.[69] In each case the entries were made when the account was first written, not at the audit, and what was listed there was either items disallowed from a previous account or else expenditure incurred without proper warrant so that the local agent could not demand reimbursement by right and could only trust in the auditors' generosity. This special paragraph for allowances sought, entered by the original writer of the account, became increasingly common in the first half of the fourteenth century and was usually placed just before the total of cash expended. At Cuxham it first appears on the account for 1309–10, but subsequently only occasionally.[70] Instead we find, for seven different years from 1334 to 1355, a full list of allowances sought drawn up as a separate schedule to the roll, a practice that can be paralleled elsewhere.[71] On the Cuxham account for 1345–6 are both a schedule and a paragraph of allowances sought;[72] both clearly belong to Stage 1 of the account's compilation, before the audit, but whereas the single item in the paragraph concerns payment made to the bailiff of another manor, which the reeve could reasonably expect to be allowed, the schedule lists many past disallowances and unauthorised payments that were being brought forward hopefully rather than with confidence. On the audit the paragraph of allowances sought and the schedule were considered separately: the auditors dealt with the former like any other paragraph of the cash account, simply striking out the items disallowed, but the amount allowed from the schedule was entered after the cash balance on the account roll, in the same way as the successful appeals against particular disallowances on the earlier accounts.

The list of allowances after the first cash balance was sometimes a very long one.[73] This was increasingly the case in the course of the fourteenth century, and it became more common too to enter there notes of subsequent payments and miscellaneous notes of the running of the manor, so that the part of the account that followed the first cash balance often came to be a substantial part of the document, on a leased manor sometimes bulkier than the whole of the cash account. An account for Halton (Cornw.: Hylle family) in 1417–18,[74] for instance, follows the first cash balance with three separate series of allowances, each followed by a new total, a note showing how much of this balance was owed by the present reeve, how much by his predecessor, a note of subsequent payment, with yet a further cash balance, and three separate memoranda; the writers ran out of space on the front of the account, and continued at the foot of the dorse, reversing the roll. These additions after the cash balance, whether added at the audit or subsequently, were known as the foot of the account (pes compoti),[75] but the same name is applied to certain of the schedules that were coming to be attached to manorial accounts in increasing profusion.[76] At Flamborough (E. R. Yorks.: Bridlington Priory) from 1348 onwards a note of the annual profit, worked out with valuations of produce delivered to the Priory, was normally appended to the account, and the cash expenses would include 2*s.* 0*d.* paid 'to the Lord Prior's chaplain for the foot of the account', distinguished from the 3*s.* 4*d.* paid 'to the clerk writing the account'.[77] At Culmstock (Devon: Exeter Cathedral Chapter) in 1369 a note headed 'Foot of the account' shows how responsibility for the current debt was divided between the then reeve and no fewer than seven of his predecessors.[78] All these developments — the long, extended notes after the cash balance, the number and variety of schedules — were pointing the way to diminishing uniformity in manorial accounts and presage the third phase of manorial accounting.

6. MANORIAL SURVEYS AND COURT ROLLS

The other manorial documents from Cuxham are less remarkable than the records of account. The two principal classes are the surveys and the court rolls. The evolution of the manorial survey has never been fully investigated; it is work that is badly needed, since much of our understanding of manorial history in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries depends on these records. The Cuxham examples, however, are few in number and are late in date or fragmentary, and it would be inappropriate to use them as a basis for a study of this sort. The court rolls are a more important series, very nearly complete from 1294 to 1359,[1] and they illustrate well the developments in form and contents typical of that time. On the other hand, they are in one way less full than contemporary series from many other manors. Merton College had at Cuxham the jurisdiction belonging to the lord of any manor, but did not claim view of frankpledge, with its accompanying rights of enforcing the assizes of bread and ale and of trying certain criminal cases; this leet jurisdiction belonged to the lord of the honour of Wallingford, who administered it through his court at Chalgrove, and there are no records relating to Cuxham before 1432.[2] There are many series of manorial court rolls in print, and much careful work has been done on their form and contents, from F. W. Maitland's pioneer introduction to the Selden Society's Select pleas in manorial and other seignorial courts (1889) to Professor R. B. Pugh's recent analysis in Court rolls of the Wiltshire manors of Adam de Stratton (1970).[3] For the court rolls as well as the surveys, therefore, it seems best to give here simply a brief outline of their development, sufficient to place the Cuxham records in their proper evolutionary context.

A survey is a written description of an estate.[4] It is the oldest type of record of manorial administration in England, and a few short specimens and fragments survive from before the Norman Conquest. These tell us little about the manorial demesne lands beyond their hidage, that is, their assessment for taxation, but rather more about the obligations of the peasant tenants. Thus a fragment of a pre-Conquest survey from Hurstbourne Priors (Hants.) simply lists all the customary services and payments in cash and produce due from the peasants (ceorlas) living there;[5] a mid-eleventh-century survey of Tidenham (Gloucs.) lists the hidages of the various hamlets that made up the manor, then describes the works and other renders due from two sorts of peasant tenant, the geneat and the gebur.[6] Twenty years after the Norman Conquest William I initiated the most massive survey undertaken in medieval Europe, covering his entire kingdom; the result, after several stages of processing, formed Domesday Book. In the history of private estate surveys this had two consequences. In the first place quite a number of surveys of individual estates were based on the information that was gathered for Domesday Book. In some cases, as at Ely Abbey or St Augustine's Priory, Canterbury, the estate survey is simply a copy of this information in an early stage of its compilation, preserving details and evidence of arrangement that would otherwise be lost to us.[7] In other cases, as at Canterbury Cathedral Priory, the exact relationship is more complex.[8] Most of these Domesday-based surveys date from the late eleventh century, but as late as 1160–70 we find the Domesday survey for Herefordshire being copied and brought up to date by giving the names of the contemporary landholders.[9] The other effect of the Domesday survey was less obvious but longer lasting: several twelfth-century estate surveys give a little more information about the demesne on each manor than their Anglo-Saxon precursors did, and this information — notably the number of ploughlands and a list of livestock — was clearly inspired by the Domesday enquiries on just these points.[10]

[1] From the beginning of the continuous series of court rolls in 1294 the only courts mentioned on the Cuxham manorial accounts for which no court roll has survived are one in 1345, two in 1348, two in 1349, and one each in 1351, 1358 and 1359.

[4] As far as we know estate surveying in medieval England never led to graphic representation in the form of a map or diagram. Only a score of local maps earlier than 1500 survive, and their development seems quite unconnected with that of surveying; a preliminary list of those known, by R. A. Skelton and P. D. A. Harvey, is in Imago Mundi xxiii (1970), pp. 101–2.

But if the Domesday enquiry had some slight influence on their form, it did not start a general fashion for making surveys; the twelfth-century surveys are very valuable historical records, especially where, as from Burton Abbey and Ramsey Abbey, they survive from the same estate at different dates, but in all they are known from only about a dozen estates, all in ecclesiastical ownership.[11] Even though some of these surveys tell us something of the manorial demesne they are still mostly concerned with the local tenants: their names, their holdings and, above all, their obligations to the estate owner in labour services and in renders in cash and kind. Essentially they are custumals, setting down the customary obligations, though on manors where the process of commuting labour services for money rents was well advanced they partook more of the nature of rentals, simple lists of tenants with the annual rent due from each. In the twelfth century, when the demesnes were normally leased to farmers, it was not surprising that the surveys should pay little attention to them, but custumals in the same form continued to be made in the thirteenth century and later. The series from the Bec Abbey estates is a good example: these were drawn up about 1230 and revised and extended soon before 1248, and were in current use for many years, appearing in several different manuscripts with corrections and additions to keep them up to date.[12] Thirteenth-century surveys of this sort survive from lay estates too, such as the custumal of the Beauchamp manor of Stoke sub Hamdon (Som.) in 1251.[13] Even as late as 1377–80 we find Bishop Hatfield's survey of the Durham episcopal estates following basically the same pattern as that drawn up by his predecessor two centuries earlier and known as the Boldon Book, though here the peculiar conditions of Northumbrian tenure were partly responsible.[14] It is to this tradition of surveys that the Cuxham custumal of 1297–8 (no. 27) belongs, as also the list of tenants and their services that was entered on the manorial court roll in 1329 (no. 117).

But with the spread of demesne farming in the thirteenth century estate owners discovered a new need for precise information about the size and resources of their manorial demesne lands. To meet this there developed a new tradition of surveying demesnes. Perhaps it had developed already: instructions for a survey of the estates of St Paul's Cathedral in 1181 show that it was to record for each manor the acreage of arable, meadow, woods and pastures in demesne, and its potential capacity in plough-teams and livestock, just as on the surviving survey from the same estate in 1222.[15] Both surveys were made by putting questions to a jury on each manor — in 1181 seventeen manors were surveyed in this way in 22 days[16] — and in the thirteenth century this seems to have been the normal method of compilation; perhaps it always had been, for it was this method that had been used for the Domesday survey. But it may well be that the surveying of manorial demesnes developed quite separately from the recording of tenants' obligations in custumal or rental; the 'Rules' of estate management that Robert Grosseteste drew up for the countess of Lincoln between 1240 and 1242 open with injunctions to make surveys of both her tenants' lands and her manorial demesnes, but they are dealt with in separate paragraphs as distinct operations.[17] More certainly about this time there were two developments that placed the compilation of manorial surveys on a more formal and more technical basis.

The first of these developments was the introduction of the manorial extent. This was a very full survey of demesne lands and of tenants' obligations, with a value set on every piece of property and every service; this value was not the price that would be got if it were permanently sold, but its annual value, in the case of land apparently the rent that would be paid if it were leased. It may seem odd that surveys giving such a valuation of each part of the demesne should come into fashion at the very time when leasing of demesnes had been replaced by demesne farming; but the form probably arose from extents made on behalf of the Crown, in particular for the enquiries made on the death of a tenant-in-chief, and for these the potential value on lease would be significant. Certainly from at least the middle of the thirteenth century we find in legal and other manuscripts a document known as the 'Extenta manerii', giving a very precise plan for making such a survey. This document was widely circulated; Henry Bracton and Walter of Henley made use of versions of it in their works on the common law and husbandry, and specimen extents based on it are found in association with formularies and specimens of manorial accounts and court rolls.[18] We can see its use spreading in the surveys of the Beauchamp lands in Somerset: that for Stoke sub Hamdon in 1251, as we have seen, followed the traditional form of the custumal, but the new surveys made in 1287 for Stoke sub Hamdon and three other manors were made in strict accordance with the 'Extenta manerii'.[19] The 'Rules' of Robert Grosseteste and the 'Seneschaucy' simply urge the estate owner to make surveys of his lands, but Walter of Henley's 'Husbandry', a later treatise, specifically commended the extent to the improving landlord.[20] The form continued in use throughout the fourteenth century; the extents of the lands of Eynsham Abbey in the 1360s are an Oxfordshire example.[21] There is no extent among the surveys that survive from

The translation of 'vos foreyne terres' in rule i as 'those of your lands which are not part of your demesne manors' slightly obscures this point, and 'those of your lands which are not part of your manorial demesnes' is perhaps a clearer interpretation; the context suggests that rule i postulates a survey of tenants' lands on all manors, even those in demesne, rule ii a survey of manorial demesnes.

Cuxham, though the valuation of labour services appended to the 1329 court roll (no. 117) derives from this tradition.

The other development in the thirteenth century was the introduction of land measurement into surveys, Land measurement based on an acre four perches wide and forty perches long had been known in England long before the Norman Conquest,[22] but it now began to be used in surveys as a way of describing lands. One sign of this, perhaps a contributory cause, was the circulation of a table, sometimes entitled 'Assisa de mensuratione', that set out the length of land needed to make up an acre for any given width.[23] Measured acres appear on the demesnes of the bishop of Winchester at Witney (Oxon.) in 1235[24] and from this time on it becomes increasingly common to find that the various parcels of demesne land are described in surveys in terms of measured acres, roods and square perches. This part of a survey, of course, could not be based simply on the testimony of local jurors, and manorial accounts occasionally refer to the expenses of officials coming to measure the land.[25] At Cuxham the demesne was probably measured in 1318, though the text of the survey compiled then has not survived.[26] Although the size of an acre in terms of perches seldom varied, it was not necessarily measured with the 'king's perch' of $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet; indeed, the 'Seneschaucy' advises that it should be made with 'the local perch' (la perche del pays).[27] Often a survey gives the length of the perch used, and this might differ a good deal from the statute measure; the 1325 extent of 'Jurdyz' grange of Sibton Abbey in Suffolk uses a perch of 18 feet for woodland and, probably, a statute perch for all other areas.[28] It is risky to assume that where the length of the perch used is not specified it was necessarily one of $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet. Whatever perch was used one might think that the measured survey had such obvious advantages that it would become the normal form, and it is not surprising to find it advocated by the writer of the 'Seneschaucy'.[29] But although it became very common for surveys to base their descriptions of demesne lands on actual measurement, this was far from the universal custom, and the historian using any fourteenth- or fifteenth-century survey has still to decide whether its acres are measured ones or not.

This leads us to the principal problem in interpreting medieval surveys: what meaning is to be attached to the word acre (acra) when it occurs? We have seen that even where a survey certainly refers to measured acres the use of perches of differing length still leaves room for ambiguity, but in fact the measured acre is only one of three different meanings of acra. In its origin the acre seems not to have been a unit of measurement at all, but a strip-shaped piece of land of any size. As F. W. Maitland put it, 'To tell a man that one of these acre-strips was not an acre because it was too small would at one time have been like telling him that his foot was no foot because it fell short of twelve inches'.[30] This usage persists throughout the middle ages side by side with the measured acre; sometimes a document refers specifically to measured acres (acre mensurate) or to these 'customary acres', the ridged strips that made up the medieval field, the 'acres as they lie' (acre ut iacent), but more often it does not, and sometimes the same document may use the word acra in both senses without a hint that in one passage it bears one meaning, in another the other.[31] It is harder to distinguish between the two meanings than may appear at first sight, for if an arable strip of normal size in a particular place was called an acre, a small strip might be called a half-acre and a very small one a quarter-acre, giving an appearance of precise measurement that is wholly spurious. But the difficulties do not end there, for acra had yet a third meaning: it was the name given to the smallest unit in the tax-assessment system of eleventh-century England, normally $\frac{1}{120}$ of both the hide and the carucate. In this sense acra bore no relation to acres on the ground, whether measured or customary. If a man's holding was assessed at ten fiscal acres of this sort this says nothing of its area or of the number of its arable strips; all it tells us is that the tenant paid half as much tax as the tenant of a twenty-acre holding, twice as much as the tenant of a five-acre one. The taxation system that used fiscal acres soon decayed, but, like their companion units the virgate ($\frac{1}{4}$ hide) and the bovate ($\frac{1}{8}$ carucate) fiscal acres remained in some areas as a descriptive term for peasant holdings; sub-division then often led to fractional intricacies far beyond the imagination of the eleventh-century tax-gatherer.[32] Faced, then, with three possible meanings of what is the key-word in most medieval surveys, one has to rely mostly on common sense and experience to recognise which is intended, with the doubtful comfort that many historians have come to grief on just this point.[33] There are, however, two guide-lines: the first is that whereas all three kinds of acre may be sub-divided into four roods (rode) it is only measured acres that are further sub-divided into square perches; the second is that if there is any sign of uniform acreage between separate holdings, either singly or in simple combination, the acres are almost certainly fiscal ones, for no village community was so egalitarian as to give its members precisely the same number of arable strips or area of land. All three types of acre appear in the thirteenth-century Cuxham surveys, few and fragmentary though they are: the acres of the scutage lists (nos 22, 24) are almost certainly fiscal ones, while the demesne terriers (nos 23, 25) are specifically partly in measured, partly in customary acres.

[31] As do many of the Cuxham account rolls (Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 42–4). The extent of Woodeaton (Oxon.: Eynsham Abbey) in 1366 (Eynsham cartulary (Oxford Historical Soc.; 1907–8), ii, pp. 15–24) provides another example: here acra nearly always means a measured acre, selio being used for an arable strip, but the context shows that the acra rectoris (p. 15) and almost certainly the acra prati in Aluesmore and acra in cultura non fimata (pp. 18–19) are customary acres as well as the ii acre & dimidia campestres (p. 24).

The return to leasing of demesne lands in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries and the decline of labour services in favour of money rents made it pointless to produce surveys covering the whole of a manor that no longer operated as a unit, and the characteristic estate surveys of the later middle ages were separate rentals of the tenants' holdings and terriers of demesne lands. Both occur among the Cuxham records, though only the terrier of 1447–8 is printed here.[34] A terrier listed the individual parcels of an estate's lands, giving the precise location of each. It might use measured acres, like the survey of the bishop of Lincoln's demesne lands in 1348–9,[35] or customary ones; the Cuxham terrier of 1447–8 (no. 28) is unusual in describing the demesne in each arable furlong in terms of customary acres, but giving its measured length and breadth in perches. Here, as elsewhere, no valuations are given: the realities of leasing in a fluctuating land-market had made the formal valuations of the extent unnecessary and unrealistic.

By the beginning of the period of demesne farming, then, the manorial survey had already a long history behind it. The manorial court roll, on the other hand, had probably not yet come into being. Our earliest [32] The mid-13th-century custumal of Blakenham (Suff.: Bec Abbey) provides good examples of this (Bec documents, pp. 92–6).

[33] A clear-headed approach to this problem is not assisted by certain medieval writers who tried to force measured and fiscal acres into a single correlated system (as in the notes printed from a 15th-century Gloucester manuscript in Oschinsky, Henley, p. 475); one can hardly blame modern interpreters who try to do the same (as G. W. Kitchin, The manor of Manydown (Hants. Record Soc.; 1895), pp. 12–13).

[34] The earliest surviving rental from Cuxham is dated 1454 (MM 5206); like the custumal that appears on the court roll of 1329 (no. 117) it was compiled in the manorial court. In 1355 the auditors of the reeve's account ordered a rental to be made (no. 82 (rents)) and the account for 1356–7 mentions the new rental (no. 83 (rents)), but this has not survived.

records of proceedings in manorial courts occur on account rolls. Most manorial accounts, like those from Cuxham, enter under the cash receipts no more than the total profits of each court, naming the dates when the courts were held and occasionally specifying any large sum received as an entry-fine. However, the enrolled accounts of the bishops of Winchester, from 1208–9 onwards, list individually every fine and amercement, naming the person who paid and the reason for payment.[36] The same details are given on other series of manorial accounts from Winchester, including the unenrolled accounts from St Mary's Abbey (from about 1233–4 on) and the Cathedral Priory (from 1242–3).[37] The record was entirely a financial one: no further information is given, not even the dates when the courts were held. Clearly some form of record must have been made at the courts themselves to preserve the information until the annual account was drawn up, but the entry of so much detail on the account makes it likely that any preliminary record was no more than an informal list or memorandum, not meant to be kept permanently.[38] But by the late 1230s more formal records of proceedings in manorial courts were kept on some estates. In the mid-fourteenth century, St Albans Abbey drew up a series of volumes containing extracts from proceedings in manorial courts, to use as precedents or as evidence of local custom; these extracts date from as early as 1237, but the records they were copied from have disappeared and may well have been destroyed when these court-books were compiled.[39] A fourteenth-century cartulary of Ramsey Abbey includes a copy of a manorial court roll of 1239,[40] but the roll of 1246 for manors of Bec Abbey that Maitland published in 1889[41] remains undisputed as the oldest surviving original roll of an English manorial court.

Manorial court rolls from some other estates are known from the reign of Henry III, from Hatfield Broad Oak (Essex) in 1249–50, for instance, and from the Ramsey Abbey manor of Broughton (Hunts.) from 1255–6;[42] they come predominantly from eastern England. But it is only from the 1270s onwards that they survive in real profusion, and they seem to have spread in the same movement towards using written records in private administration that initiated the second phase of manorial accounting.[43] Despite the early appearance of court records on the Winchester account rolls, there is no reason to suppose that manorial court rolls were either first conceived or generally adopted as financial records; from the start they give an amount of detail quite irrelevant to the purely financial aspects of the court's business, recording cases whether or not they led to a fine or amercement.[44] From the start, too, the administration of the manorial courts seems normally to have been kept separate from an estate's financial administration, even though at first the estate steward might be closely concerned with both.[45] Merton College probably kept records of its manorial courts from the time of its foundation, though, as at Cuxham, court rolls survive only patchily from any of its manors until the 1290s; the College's earliest surviving court roll is from Cheddington (Bucks.) in 1272.[46] The first from Cuxham, in January 1279 (no. 86), is one of the earliest court rolls to survive from any manor in Oxfordshire, though it must yield precedence at least to those from the Bec Abbey manors of Swyncombe from 1246 onwards and Cottisford from 1249, the Canterbury Cathedral Priory manor of Newington from 1270, and the Westminster Abbey manor of Islip in 1274 and 1275.[47]

The earliest court rolls of Cuxham, like others of the late thirteenth century, take the same very simple form as those from the Bec estates in the 1240s. A heading gives the place and date of the court. This is followed by the essoins — those who excuse themselves from attendance and send proxies in their place — then by the cases, apparently simply in the order in which they were heard in the court; in the left-hand margin is entered the amount of any fine or amercement or other note of the outcome of a case. Then as later the manorial courts were normally held by the steward of the estate, or corresponding official, and some early court rolls reflect his wide managerial duties by including notes about running the demesne that have nothing to do with the court; presumably the steward made his visit to the manor to hold the court the occasion for a general inspection, and the court roll would be a convenient place

[43] It is likely that this reflects a real change in practice, not an accident of survival. The record of enquiries made in the manorial court at Sandon (Herts.: St Paul's Cathedral) in 1259 (mun. D. & C. St Paul's, box A 63) suggests that on that estate no court rolls were then kept on which they might be entered.

[44] I would entirely agree with Professor R. B. Pugh that 'the leading motive for writing out these and similar court rolls was to ensure that justice was done according to precedent' (Court rolls of the Wiltshire manors of Adam de Stratton, ed. R. B. Pugh (Wilts. Record Soc., xxiv; 1970), p. 21).

to make any memoranda.[48] Thus the roll of a court for Urchfont (Wilts.: St Mary's Abbey, Winchester) in December 1259 opens with an estimate of the amount of corn in unthreshed stacks and a list of the livestock on the demesne;[49] similar corn estimates are on a court roll of Newton and Melbourn (Cambs.: Ely Cathedral Priory) in November 1282, while on a schedule attached to a court roll for Newton in August 1281 is a list of those who had estimated the corn the year before.[50] Extraneous notes of this sort soon disappear from court rolls, as the rôle of the steward changed from that of a general estate manager to that of a lawyer whose only duty was to hold the courts. On the Merton College estates this was probably always his only function, for the Founder's Statutes made estate management the responsibility of the Warden alone, and we find no purely agricultural notes on the Cuxham court rolls. As on other estates, though, we find in the first half of the fourteenth century a growing formality in the structure of the court rolls. From as early as 1298 (no. 94) the profits of each court were normally entered at the foot of the roll, and from 1329 (no. 117) the names of the affeerors were entered there as well. By the 1350s the presentments of the hayward were distinguished from those of the jurors, and much use was made of set formulas, especially in entries concerning a change of tenant. The same developments can be traced in other series of fourteenth-century court rolls — those from the Cambridgeshire manors of Crowland Abbey are a good example from among those in print[51] — but they have not so far been systematically studied. They are clearly connected with the appearance of specimen court rolls, often found associated with specimen manorial accounts.[52] One very general development was the increasing length of manorial court rolls; this was partly due to the use of set formulas, often rather verbose, but rather more to a real increase in the amount of business. Many surviving series suggest that the business done by manorial courts grew steadily from the thirteenth century to the late fourteenth. Tentatively we may connect this first with estate owners' increasing control over their tenants in the thirteenth century, and latterly with the increasing professionalism of the lawyers who served as estate stewards.

[52] As in BM Add. MS. 45896, Bodl. MS. Oseney Roll 2. The same distinction may be made between treatises on court-keeping (written in French for the stewards) and rules and specimens for writing court rolls (written in Latin for the clerks) as between treatises on estate management and rules and specimens for manorial accounting. Of the four texts edited by F. W. Maitland and W. P. Baildon in The court baron (Selden Soc., iv; 1891), the first is addressed to stewards, the second and third to the clerks, and the fourth is a hybrid (op. cit., pp. 12–15). The earliest text printed there was written in the 1270s.

The steward normally held the manorial courts and the clerk who wrote the court roll was normally employed by the steward.[53] We have seen how Robert of Chalgrove's term of office as the writer of the Cuxham court rolls coincided with those of particular stewards; there is a similar connection between his successor, the anonymous writer of hand xxiv, and the steward John Brun.[54] It is presumably for this reason, not because the clerk had any influence on proceedings in court, that we find minor changes in the contents of the court rolls corresponding to changes in the hand; for instance the five rolls in hand xviii (nos 95–99) name one pledge instead of the usual two for payment of amercements, though two for new tenants on entry to their holdings, while the roll of November 1323 (no. 112), in a hand that does not recur, names a single pledge for payment of an entry fine, none at all for payments of amercements.[55] The thirteenth-century court rolls for the Bec Abbey manors enter the court for each manor one after the other more or less in the order in which the steward toured the estate, like the same estate's earliest account rolls.[56] Some trace of this arrangement can be seen in a few cases where the Cuxham record is placed on the same roll as that of the Ibstone (Bucks.) court, held the day before or after.[57] But by the late thirteenth century it was normal on most estates to file the court rolls of each manor separately,[58] and most of the Cuxham rolls conform to this arrangement: if a single roll contains a record of more than one court, these are more likely to be successive courts at the same manor than courts held at different manors on a single tour by the steward. Courts at Cuxham were held infrequently, and as long as four years might pass between two sessions, but urgent business might be transacted out of court by the Warden in [53] Some editors of manorial court rolls have suggested that the steward may sometimes, at least, have written the court rolls himself (thus Miss M. K. Dale in Chalgrave court roll, pp. vii–viii, and H. W. Chandler in Five court rolls of Great Cressingham (1885), p. vii). There is, of course, nothing impossible in this, though I suspect that, if it ever happened, it was a very unusual proceeding.

[54] See nos 131–133 and Appendix VII.

[55] This might be made a basis for work on this and other series of court rolls to determine how far the form of procedure depended on the particular steward, how far on the custom of the manor. Another instance from the Cuxham court rolls of variation in form is the appearance of a six-handed, instead of the usual three-handed, oath on nos 105 (in a hand that does not recur) and 108 (in hand xx, which recurs only on no. 107 where there is no relevant case).

[56] In 1289, at least, the steward both held manorial courts and audited the accounts on the same circuit of the Bec Abbey manors (Bec documents, p. xiii).

[57] Nos. 109, 110, 111.

[58] On the Bec estates this became the practice in the early 14th century (Morgan, Bec, p. 6); Chalgrave (Beds.: Loring fam.) presents an extreme example of a single roll, 20 feet long, recording most of the courts held on the manor for the 35 years from 1278 to 1313 (Chalgrave court roll, p. vii). At Durham Cathedral Priory on the other hand, the custom of recording the courts held at one time on a single roll for the whole estate persisted throughout the fourteenth century (Halmota prioratus Dunelmensis (Surtees Soc., lxxxii; 1889)), and in the 15th century the entry of courts for several manors on a single roll became normal on the Merton Coll. estates (Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 12).

person, and entered at the end of the previous court roll;[59] examples are the last three entries on the court roll of June 1279 (no. 87) and the final entry on the roll of May 1355 (no. 139), and the same practice can be found elsewhere.[60] Apart from these additions the early Cuxham court rolls seem to have been drawn up each at a single operation, perhaps at the conclusion of the court's business or even as the court proceeded — their general appearance would not preclude this.[61] This last is the more likely as from 1304 on it seems to have been usual to leave a gap after the heading of the roll for the insertion of the essoins; perhaps they were given some period of grace after the court was opened in which to send their proxies with their excuses. In some of the rolls the amounts of amercements in the margin were clearly added after the roll was completed, and this may have been the normal practice;[62] this would confirm other evidence that the affeerors assessed the amounts of the amercements en bloc at the end of the court's business.[63]

Subsidiary records of medieval manorial courts are rare, and the list of agenda for the Cuxham court of July 1310 (no. 104) is of particular interest, showing that cases to be heard in the court were notified to the steward in advance. Probably such a list was normally drawn up, and thrown away after the court was over; it may well have been compiled when the holding of the court was announced, for in 1357–8 we find that it is John Clericus, who wrote the year's view of account and final account roll, who was sent to Cuxham to give notice of the two courts that were held that year.[64] Estreat lists, summarising the fines and amercements imposed in the court so that the reeve could collect and account for the proceeds, are occasionally mentioned, but none survives from Cuxham and very few from other manors.[65] In the latest court rolls printed here the clerk refers to these estreats for details of the hayward's attachments — minor cases of trespass and the like that he did not think it worth his while to list in full on the roll. This reflects the growing business and growing formality of the manorial courts. But of the detailed development of their procedure, as of so many other aspects of private administration in medieval England, we have still much to learn.

TERRIERS AND LISTS OF TENANTS, 1227–1448

Scutage list, [7 Mar. 1227 × 18 Nov. 1243]
MM 5906 mem. 1 dorse

Copied on the back of the court rolls of 1279 (nos. 86 and 87). The list seems to date from the time when Ralph Chenduit was lord of Cuxham; Robert of Hurtmore, who sold his lands in Cuxham at that time (see no. 12) is still shown as a tenant, but Thomas son of Roger of Brightwell must have already relinquished his half-virgate (see nos 10 and 11).

Demesne terrier, [1227 × 1271] MM 5906 mem. 2 dorse

Copied on the back of the court roll of 1282 (no. 88) in a different but contemporary hand. The terrier is later than the consolidation of demesne arable tentatively attributed to Ralph Chenduit, but is probably earlier than Merton College's acquisition of the manor.

In Campo versus puryton' vbi spina situatur sunt de dominico lxxiij acre di. et j roda.

In Campo communi sunt ix acre et vna roda et mensurantur.

Summa viij^{xx}vj acre.

Scutage list, [11 Nov. 1278 × 27 May 1282]

MM 5906 mem. 1 dorse

Copied on the back of the court rolls of 1279 (nos. 86 and 87), following the earlier scutage list (no. 22). The number of villein half-virgates in Cuxham did not rise to eight, as listed here, until after Martinmas 1278, when the reeve accounted for customary renders from seven only (see no. 35); as Eva widow of William is named as a tenant the list is unlikely to be later than her remarriage (as Eva la Blake) to Richard Bovechericheche (entered as an addition to the court roll for 2 June 1279, no. 87, and presumably not later than the next surviving court roll, 27 May 1282, no. 88). In fact the tenants on the list are the same as those in Cuxham's entry on the Hundred Rolls of 1279 (Rotuli hundredorum (Record Comm.; 2v., 1812–18), ii, p. 758).

Written by hand ix.

Isti sunt tenentes domini qui debent dare scutagium. Robertus de la Grene tenet iiij acras. Et Robertus le sergeaunt tenet xxj acras. Isabella relicta Reginaldi tenet dimidiam virgatam terre. Et Robertus filius Ricardi tenet dimidiam virgatam. [Et] Iohannes heest tenet dimidiam virgatam. Et Ricardus le Wyte dimidiam virgatam. Et Gilebertus Aleyn dimidiam virgatam. Demesne terrier, [20 Nov. 1292 × 19 Nov. 1293 or 25 Jan. 1347 × 24 Jan. 1348] MM 5892 mem. 1

Written in a 14th- or 15th-century hand. Another copy, in a hand of the mid-15th century, is prefixed to the demesne terrier of 1447 × 1448 (no. 28, q.v.) in MM vol. 1.1, f. iii; the document is dated from the note at the end of this copy. Two further copies, also of the 15th century, are in a cartulary of Merton College, MM vol. 2.7, f. 73; one of these is a very corrupt text, though its variant 'Et etiam inter terram custimariorum' for 'Et in Campo exteriore' is of interest. Significant variants in the other copies are given in the footnotes.

List of tenants owing suit of court, [circa 1296] MM 4122 dorse

The roll from which this list is taken is headed 'Kalendarium in omnibus maneriis scolarium de Merton' scilicet de liberis tenentibus[9] qui debent sequi curiam dictorum scolarium'; it gives similar lists for six other manors of Merton College, and throughout includes unfree as well as free tenants. The list for Cuxham cannot be reconciled with other evidence of the tenants' names. The free tenant, Robert ate Grene, is nowhere else named Bercarius, and he has probably been conflated with the Robert Bercarius who by marrying Alina in le Hurne in 1296 (see no. 92) acquired a villein tenement not otherwise represented in the list. Roger Waleys is omitted from the villeins and Richard Turweston from the cottagers. Adam son of Richard cannot be identified with any known villein tenant, and 'Ingeleys' is probably the same

[1] MM vol. 1.1 'Coxham'. [2] MM vol. 2.7 'terra in dominica'. [3] MM vol. 1.1, vol. 2.7 'dicitur'. [4] MM vol. 1.1 'Burowefeld'. [5] MM vol. 1.1 'Brutewell''. person as 'Matilda Engleys'. The list must be later than the creation of Adam ate Hethe's villein holding in 1292–3 (see Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 121); of the two marriages besides Robert Bercarius' recorded on the court roll of 29 April 1296 (no. 92) the list seems to take cognisance of one (Robert Waldrugge to Agnes widow of Robert Oldman, whose surname he thereupon assumed; see Harvey, op. cit., p. 127) but not of the other (William ate Heycroft to Christina daughter of Adam ate Hethe).

Custumal, 20 Nov. 1297 × 19 Nov. 1298 MM 5899

On the dorse of the roll, in a mid-14th-century hand, is a summary of the rents due from tenants in Cuxham as listed in the present document, the money rents being tabulated; it concludes with the note 'Inquiratur quolibet anno super Compotum istius Manerii de Custumariis quociens braciauerunt ne prepositus faciat[1] concelamentum in rotulo.' As it adds nothing further that is not derived from the present document it has not been printed. Holes at the bottom of the roll suggest that it once formed part of a file. A 15th-century copy of the present document and of the summary on its dorse is in Merton College's cartulary, MM vol. 2.7, ff. 87^{b}–89^{b}. Significant variants are given in the footnotes.

Demesne terrier, 1 Sept. 1447 × 31 Aug. 1448

MM vol. 1.1, ff. iii–iv

Written at the beginning of the 'Liber Ruber' on a bifolium which seems to have been inserted in the volume at an early date; among notes on the last page of the bifolium, facing the beginning of the original text, is a 14th-century list of charters concerning rents in London with lines drawn to a marginal heading in the same style as the original text of the 'Liber Ruber'. The present terrier is preceded by a copy of the demesne terrier of 1292–3 or 1347–8 (no. 25); both are written in a hand of the mid-15th century with corrections in another contemporary hand. It is in two parts, of which the second is an abridgment of the first.

Chapter account, 29 Sept. [1277]–29 Sept. 1278 MM 4121

Followed, on the front of the roll, by the chapter account for 29 September 1278–[26 March 1279] (no. 36), and by the corresponding accounts for Ibstone. A schedule attached to the bottom of the roll gives a stock account for an unnamed manor (not Cuxham). The roll is badly damaged, especially near the top.

Indenture of stock, 18 Apr. and [11 July] 1349
Schedule attached to MM 5878

Attached to Hugh ate Grene's account as bailiff, 29 September 1349–25 July 1350 (no. 77, q.v.). Indented at the top, with 'INDENTVRA' written across the indentures. As originally written the document was an indenture of the stock taken over by Thomas ate Grene as bailiff; his account in this office runs from 17 April to 23 June 1349 (no. 75). Although the date and heading remained unchanged, the references to idem Hugo suggest that the alterations and additions were made to adapt it (perhaps to serve as a draft for a new indenture) to the stock taken over by Hugh ate Grene, whose first account as bailiff opens on 11 July 1349 (no. 76).

List of the goods of Robert Oldman, [circa summer 1349]
MM 5874 mem. 4

Robert Oldman, the reeve, died after 8 February 1349 when the list of his debtors was drawn up (no. 46) but before the close of the account for 25 July 1348–18 April 1349 (no. 74) on which his own and his wife's heriots are entered. His son John took over as bailiff, but the close of the account probably marked his death also, and in default of a further heir to the family's customary holding their goods would then have been taken over by Merton College (see Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 72).

ACCOUNT ROLLS, 1276–1359

Reeve's account, 5 Feb.–29 Sept. 1276 MM 5803 mem. 2

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand vi (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals and balances from the corn account except the balance of wheat; (ii) altered and added entries throughout the roll in at least three successive operations (see petty exp.), altering totals accordingly.

At the audit: Hand vii replaced the entry of surplus at the beginning of the cash discharge by an entry of arrears at the beginning of the cash charge, altered an entry of petty exp. and corrected totals here and elsewhere in the cash account, added totals and balances to the corn account, and altered the number of hens remaining on the stock account.

After the audit: No alterations.

The draft of this account forms no. 30.

Reeve's account, [29 Sept. 1288]–25 July [1289] MM 5807

The payments of mixed corn to the famuli show that the period covered by this account began at Michaelmas.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and balance of cash; (ii) altered entries in the sales of dairy produce and costs of ploughs and added one to the wages of famuli, altering paragraph totals accordingly.

At the audit: Hand xii (i) added the firȧt entry of exp. at the audit (super capitulum) at the end of the cash discharge, and the grand totals and balance of cash, and on the dorse altered and added entries of oats, piglets, capons and hens, altering totals accordingly; (ii) added the second entry of exp. at the audit, altering total and cash balance accordingly, and added the valuation of stock following the cash balance.

After the audit: Hand xii added the list of equipment at the end of the stock account (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

Reeve's account, [25 July 1289]–[25 July 1290] MM 5808

An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll. The top of the first membrane is missing and other parts of the roll are damaged. The amounts of cash, corn and stock received and remaining show that the account covers the whole period between the accounts for [29 September 1288]–25 July [1289] (no. 58) and 25 July 1290–25 July 1291 (no. 60).

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account; (ii) added some provisional totals on the cash account, mostly without the word 'Summa'; (iii) altered and added entries in the issues of manor, costs of ploughs, costs of carts, petty exp. and visitors' exp., adding a new provisional total of petty exp.; (iv) entered definitive totals and balance of cash (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xii added an entry to the issues of manor, and two unheaded paragraphs (following the allowances and the harvest exp.) to the cash discharge, altering totals accordingly.

After the audit: Hand xii added the list of equipment at the end of the stock account (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

Reeve's account, 25 July 1290–25 July 1291 MM 5809

An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll. At the bottom of the front of the roll are the accounts of doves and cheese carried over from the back; these are printed in their proper place at the end of the stock account.

It has not been possible to reconstruct the exact sequence of composition of this account; in outline it seems to have been compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account; (ii) added some provisional totals on the cash account; (iii) entered the paragraph totals and grand totals of cash charge and exp. (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xii (i) altered, added and deleted items throughout the cash and corn accounts, altering totals accordingly; (ii) altered the entry of cash liveries following the grand total of exp.; (iii) added the grand total discharge and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 25 July 1291–25 July 1292 MM 5810

A row of sewing-holes shows that a schedule, probably an indenture of account, was once attached to the bottom of the roll.

[1] MS. 'mun'' for 'min''.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll (the discharge of oats was written at this stage, but in a different hand), omitting nearly all totals from the cash account and some totals and balances from the corn account; (ii) added and altered entries in sale of wheat (altering the corn account accordingly), costs of carts, petty exp. and gifts; (iii) added the paragraph totals to the cash account and the missing totals and balances to the corn account, with a marginal note of the grand total of cash charge (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: (i) A second hand added a marginal note of the grand total of cash discharge (this may, however, have been done before the audit); (ii) hand xii added, altered and deleted entries in the assessed rents, wages and gifts, altering the paragraph totals accordingly, corrected other paragraph totals that had been incorrectly added, and added sale of malt to the end of the cash charge, altering the corn account accordingly; (iii) hand xii added the grand totals of cash charge and discharge, following the latter with entries of cash liveries and the balance.

After the audit: No alterations.

The paragraphs for sale of wool and costs of threshing on the cash account and for malt on the corn account may possibly have been inserted at an early stage in spaces left blank.

[1] That this paragraph, clearly in a different hand, was copied from a draft written in hand xii can be shown (i) by the occurrence of the same idiosyncrasies of grammar and spelling, notably the use of either the genitive or the dative case after the phrase 'In prebenda', the use of 'sancte' for 'sancti' before 'Luce' (cf. the entry in the visitors' expenses on the front of the roll) and the spelling 'Equs' for 'Equus'; (ii) by the spelling 'Cudintony', clearly due to a misreading of 'Cudintoun' in hand xii, which often gives a distinctive flourish to a final n. From the appearance of the document the paragraph seems to have been written on the roll before the paragraph following, not inserted later in a space left blank.

Reeve's account, 25 July 1293–25 July 1294 MM 5811

An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting nearly all totals from the cash account; (ii) added entries to the petty exp. and costs of the hall; (iii) added some provisional totals to the cash account, in some cases making two attempts at the correct addition; (iv) added the definitive paragraph totals to the cash account (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xii (i) added, altered and deleted entries on the cash account in sale of cheese (altering the stock account accordingly), sale of wheat, petty exp. and visitors' exp. and on the corn and stock accounts in wheat, oats (in two successive stages) and hens, in each case altering the paragraph totals and balance accordingly; (ii) added the definitive grand totals of cash charge and exp.; (iii) added two entries of sale of wheat on the cash account, altering the totals accordingly but without altering the corn account; (iv) added the cash liveries paragraph, grand total of cash discharge and balance.

After the audit: No alterations.

Although the cash liveries were entered on the roll only at the audit, they were taken into account when the provisional grand total of cash discharge wās entered as £18. 8*s.* 7*d.*

Reeve's account, 25 July 1294–25 July 1295 MM 5812

An indenture of account is attached to the top of the roll.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting some totals and balances from the cash and corn accounts; (ii) added some provisional totals to the cash account, including grand totals for charge and for discharge and balance (i.e. the last two notes on the front of the roll); (iii) on the corn account added entries to the currall and oats, filled in the amounts of wheat and oats sold, hitherto left blank, and added the missing totals and balances, and on the cash account added entries to the sale of cheese, sale of oats, costs of buildings and visitors' exp., added the definitive paragraph totals and the cash liveries paragraph with its first total, £51. 8*s*. (these may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xii (i) added and altered entries in harvest exp., cash liveries and wheat, altering totals and balances accordingly; (ii) struck out the cash liveries paragraph (rewriting it as three separate entries) and the added definitive grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 25 July 1296–[12 July 1297] MM 5813

An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll. The account for 1297–8 (no. 65) opens on 12 July.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xvii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and some paragraph totals from the cash account; (ii) made alterations in the sale of wheat paragraph and its total and added the missing paragraph totals on the cash account (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xvii (i) added an entry to the reeve's allowances, altering the total accordingly; (ii) struck two entries from the reeve's allowances, altering the total accordingly; (iii) added the grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 12 July 1297–20 July 1298 MM 5814

The first membrane is separated from the rest of the roll; part at the bottom forms a detached fragment and part is missing. An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll; the final note on the front had evidently been added before it was sewn on.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xvii (i) wrote the whole roll, probably including all totals except the grand totals of cash and the total discharge and balance of wheat; (ii) filled in on the corn account the amount of wheat sold, hitherto left blank, and added the total discharge and balance of wheat (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xvii (i) added an entry to the petty exp. and deleted one from the forinsec payments, altering the totals accordingly; (ii) added the grand totals and balance of cash, including the note of allowances, etc., and net balance, deleting the claim for allowance from the note at the end of the front of the roll.

After the audit: A second hand added the amount of profit (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

The addition of paragraphs for pepper to the cash and stock accounts and the alterations in the issues of the manor cannot certainly be assigned to any particular stage of compilation, but were probably made before the audit.

Reeve's account, 20 July 1298–25 July 1299 MM 5815

There are a series of holes and other damage in the first membrane. An indenture of account is attached to the bottom of the roll.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xvii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and some paragraph totals from the cash account; (ii) added entries to the sale of stock, stock bought, petty exp. and harvest exp., altering totals where necessary, and added the paragraph of visitors' exp.; (iii) added the missing paragraph totals on the cash account (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: Hand xvii (i) added allowances for defects of measure to the wheat, currall, barley and dredge on the corn account, altering totals and balances accordingly (this may, however, have been done before the audit); (ii) added the grand totals and balance of cash; (iii) added the amount of profit; (iv) added the note of the stack of wheat at the end of the front of the roll.

After the audit: No alterations.

The memorandum at the end of the stock account and the paragraph for pepper following it cannot be assigned to any particular stage of compilation; they were added on separate occasions.

Reeve's account, [26 July 1317]–[26 July 1318] MM 5841

The top of the first membrane is missing and there is further damage throughout the membrane.

[1] MS. 'facti'.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxi (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals from the cash account and the total discharge and balance of wheat and currall from the corn account; (ii) added the paragraph of costs of threshing and winnowing in space left blank (this may, however, have been done later than operation iii or iv); (iii) added entries of sale of wheat and currall on both the cash and the corn accounts, altering the paragraph total on the cash account and adding the missing totals and balances on the corn account; (iv) added entries of further issue to the wheat and currall on the corn account, altering totals and balances accordingly.

At the audit: Hand xxi (i) struck out the paragraph of costs of mill and added the grand totals and balance of cash; (ii) added the first entry of payment at the audit and new balance of cash; (iii) added the second entry of payment at the audit and new balance of cash; (iv) added the note of outstanding debts at the end of the front of the roll.

After audit: No alterations.

The addition of the paragraph for cash liveries and the alterations in the stock account cannot certainly be assigned to any particular stage of compilation, but were probably made before the audit.

Part of this account is reproduced in Plate I.

Reeve's account, 26 July 1318–26 July 1319 MM 5842

There is a series of small holes in the first membrane.
The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxi (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting from the cash account the paragraph total for sale of malt and grand totals and from the corn account totals and balances for wheat and malt; (ii) added and altered entries in the cost of new granary, forinsec exp., capons, hens and pepper, altering totals accordingly, added the last five paragraphs of the stock account, added on the corn account the amount of wheat sold and the totals and balance for wheat, altered the amounts malted in the accounts of barley and dredge (altering the totals, but not the balances, accordingly and altering the account of malt correspondingly for dredge but not for barley), added an entry to the dredge, altering the total accordingly, added the amount sold to the account of malt, adding discharge total and balance, and added a final entry and paragraph total to the sale of malt on the cash account (some of these may, however, have been done at the audit).

At the audit: (i) A second hand added the grand totals and balance of cash, with the first note of cash livery at the audit (£16) and the net balance, and also added on the dorse the note following the discharge of wheat and the paragraph for butter; (ii) a third hand added the second note of cash livery at the audit (£4) and a new net balance; (iii) a fourth hand added the note of the reeve's repayments at the end of the front of the roll (this may, however, have been done after the audit).

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 26 July 1327–26 July 1328 MM 5850

A slit at the top of the roll with a parchment loop tied through it suggests that other documents were once attached.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account and the discharge total and balance of oats from the corn account; (ii) added entries to the perquisites of court, for. rec., costs of carts, petty exp., costs of hoeing and mowing, and visitors' exp. on the cash account, to the oats (adding the discharge total and balance) on the corn account and to the ewes and geese (altering the totals and balances accordingly) on the stock account.

At the audit: (i) A second hand added the notes of corn yields and marginal totals of oats discharge paragraphs and altered an entry in the mixed corn on the corn account, added notes, mostly in the margin, on the stock account, and added the valuations of ale in the perquisites of court, paragraph totals, grand totals and balance of cash; (ii) a third hand added the note following the balance of cash (this may, however, have been done after the audit).

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 26 July 1328–26 July 1329 MM 5851

An indenture of harvest expenses (no. 41) is attached to the right side of the front of the roll opposite the paragraph of harvest expenses.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account (except for arrears) and the discharge total and balance of oats from the corn account; (ii) added entries to the oats, adding the discharge total.

At the audit: (i) A second hand added the notes of corn yields, marginal totals of oats discharge paragraphs, and disallowances and entries of sales at the audit, with valuations, throughout the corn and stock accounts; (ii) hand xxiii added the entries of sales at the audit, with valuations, to the wheat and white peas; (iii) the second hand altered entries throughout the cash account and added the paragraph for sales at the audit, paragraph totals (some central, some in the margin) and grand totals and balance of cash with notes of payment at the audit, allowance of disallowed item and net balances.

After the audit: The second hand added the amount of profit and other sum (£20. 18*s.* $3\frac{3}{4}$d.) at the end of the front of the roll.

Reeve's account, 26 July 1329–26 July 1330 MM 5852

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and most paragraph totals from the cash account and the discharge total and balance of oats from the corn account; (ii) added entries to the sale of wheat (altering the corn account accordingly), sale of stock (altering the account of capons accordingly), visitors' exp. and cash liveries, added an entry to the oats on the corn account, adding discharge total and balance, and on the stock account added and altered entries for chicks, altering totals and balances accordingly.

At the audit: Hand xxiii (i) deleted and added entries in the boviculi and annales on the stock account, and entered a disallowance and sale at the audit, with valuation, to the eggs; (ii) added the paragraphs for sales at the audit and steward's exp., and paragraph totals throughout the cash account; (iii) added an entry to the issues of the manor and deleted and altered entries in the cash liveries, altering the totals accordingly; (iv) added the grand totals and balance of cash, with a note of further charge and net balance.

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's account, 25 July 1346–25 July 1347 MM 5872

An indenture of harvest expenses is attached to the bottom of the roll.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and most paragraph totals from the cash account, and the charge total of oats, discharge total and balance of hens, and totals and balance of wool from the corn and stock accounts; (ii) added entries to the issues of the manor, costs of carts and purchase of corn (deleting another entry there) on the cash account and to the oats (without altering the total) on the corn account, inserted the number of hens sold in the sale of stock and on the stock account in spaces hitherto left blank (adding the discharge total and balance of hens) and altered an entry in the paragraph for capons (altering the total and balance accordingly).

At the audit: (i) Hand xxv struck out entries from the allowances sought by the reeve, and added the two notes about wheat at the end of the front of the roll; (ii) hand xxiii entered a disallowance and sale at the audit in the barley on the corn account, and altered an entry in the braseum cursale, altering total and balance accordingly, added the discharge total and balance of wool in the stock account, and on the cash account added the paragraph for sales at the audit and an entry of payment at the audit to the cash liveries, and struck out entries from the for. exp. and allowances sought by the reeve; (iii) hand xxiii struck out the entry of payment at the audit from the cash liveries paragraph, adding another entry in its place, and added the missing paragraph totals throughout the cash account, as well as the grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: Hand xxv struck out the first note at the end of the front of the roll, adding an explanatory note.

Reeve's account, 25 July 1347–25 July 1348 MM 5876

Parts of both sides of the roll are damaged.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting grand totals and most paragraph totals from the cash account, all totals and balances (except in the liveries to famuli) from the corn account and the totals and balances for wool from the stock account; (ii) added and altered entries throughout the roll, altering totals and balances in the stock account accordingly, and added the missing totals and balances in the corn and stock accounts.

At the audit: Hand xxv (i) entered disallowances, sales at the audit and other additions and alterations in the corn and stock accounts; (ii) added, altered and deleted entries throughout the cash account and added the paragraph for sales at the audit and all missing paragraph totals; (iii) altered the totals for costs of ploughs, petty exp. and (adding an entry) Warden's exp.; (iv) added the grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

Reeve's and bailiff's account, 25 July 1348–18 Apr. 1349
MM 5875 mem. 2

The wheat paragraph shows that John Oldman was employed as bailiff, not as reeve. The roll is slightly damaged near the top.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account and the discharge totals and balances of oats, capons and hens on the corn and stock accounts; (ii) added and altered entries throughout the roll, altering totals and balances accordingly, and added the paragraph for cash liveries, omitting the amount from its last entry; (iii) added the amount to the last entry of cash liveries; (iv) added notes to the last entry of cash liveries and above the paragraph for cash liveries.

At the audit: Hand xxv (i) entered disallowances, sales at the audit and other additions and alterations on the corn and stock accounts, adding the discharge totals and balances of oats and capons; (ii) added, altered and deleted entries throughout the cash account and added the paragraph for sales at the audit and all paragraph totals; (iii) added the grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

Part of this account is reproduced in Plate II.

Bailiff's account, 29 Sept. 1349–25 July 1350 MM 5878

An indenture of stock (no. 48) is attached to the bottom of the roll.
The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account and from the paragraph for wool on the stock account.

At the audit: (i) Hand xxiii added the paragraphs for arrears and cash liveries and added and altered entries in the paragraphs for assessed rent, wheat, oats and hens, altering some of the totals and balances accordingly (some of these may, however, have been done before the audit); (ii) hand xxv entered sales at the audit on the corn account and other additions and alterations on the corn and stock accounts, adding the missing totals and balance of wool; (iii) hand xxv deleted and altered entries on the cash account and added the paragraph totals and grand total to the cash charge account; (iv) hand xxv added the paragraph for sales at the audit, altering the grand total of cash charge accordingly, added the paragraph totals and grand total to the cash discharge account and added the balance of cash; (v) hand xxv added the first note (about wheat) following the balance of cash.

After the audit: Hand xxv (i) added the second note (about a cock and hens) following the balance of cash; (ii) added the third note (about amercements) following the balance of cash.

Bailiff's account, 31 July 1350–26 July 1351 MM 5879

An account of the goods of Robert Oldman (no. 50) is attached to the bottom of the roll.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: (i) Hand xxiii wrote the corn account and the stock account to the end of the hoggetti; (ii) hand xxvi wrote the stock account from the piglets to the end and, omitting all totals, the whole of the cash account.

At the audit: Hand xxv (i) entered a disallowance and sale at the audit in the paragraph for peas and vetch, added a paragraph for the bee-hive and added and altered other entries throughout the corn and stock accounts, altering totals and balances accordingly; (ii) added, altered and deleted entries throughout the cash account and added the paragraph for sales at the audit and all paragraph totals; (iii) added the grand totals and a preliminary note of balance of cash; (iv) deleted this note, replacing it with a new note of balance and payment at the end of the front of the roll.

After the audit: No alterations.

Bailiff's account, [26 July 1351]–[25 July 1352] MM 5880

An indenture of the harvest expenses (no. 51), two copies of the bailiff's petition for allowances (no. 52) and an account of the goods of Robert Oldman (no. 53) are attached to the roll. The first membrane of the account is missing and the rest is very faded. The amounts of cash, corn and stock received and remaining show that the account covers the whole period between the accounts for 31 July 1350–26 July 1351 (no. 78) and 25 July–15 September 1352 (no. 80).

The account was written by hand xxiii and the additions and alterations on auditing were made by hand xxv. The roll is so damaged and faded that it is not possible to reconstruct the detailed order of compilation.

Bailiff's account, 25 July 1353–25 July 1354 MM 5882

The bailiff's petition for allowances (no. 54) is attached to the left side of the front of the roll at the end of the cash account.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxiii (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account; (ii) added paragraphs for for. rec. and cash liveries in the cash account and for calves, in space left blank, on the stock account, added the heading for sales at the audit and other entries throughout the cash account, and to the wheat on the corn account.

At the audit: Hand xxviii (i) added the note of yield of wheat and entered disallowances, sales at the audit, with valuations, and other alterations and notes throughout the corn and stock accounts; (ii) entered alterations and notes throughout the cash account and added the paragraph of sales at the audit, paragraph totals, grand totals and balance of cash with note following.

After the audit: Hand xxviii struck out part of the note following the balance of cash, adding a note of explanation beside it, and finished its last sentence (this may, however, have been done at the audit).

Reeve's account, 30 Sept. 1354–22 July 1355 MM 5883

The reeve's petition for allowances (no. 55) is attached to the bottom of the roll. The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxx (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account, all totals and balances from the corn account and some from the stock account; (ii) added the paragraph for costs of mowing in a space left blank, and other entries throughout the cash and corn accounts and in the paragraphs for cart-horses, geese and chicks on the stock account, adding the missing charge total and balance for geese and adding also the note between the paragraphs for eggs and hides.

At the audit: Hand xxx (i) added the notes of crop yields and entered disallowances, sales at the audit, with valuations, and other alterations and notes throughout the corn and stock accounts; (ii) entered alterations and notes throughout the cash account, and added the final entry to the Warden's exp., the paragraph of sales at the audit, paragraph totals, grand totals and balance of cash with note following; (iii) added the note of allowances, with total and net balance, after the former cash balance and following note.

After the audit: (i) Hand xxx added the amount of profit (this may, however, have been done at the audit); (ii) a second hand added the note of charge on the next view at the end of the front of the roll.

Bailiff's account, 29 Sept. 1356–22 July 1357 MM 5885

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxx (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account (except for rents), all totals and balances from the corn account and some from the stock account; (ii) added the paragraph for cash liveries and other entries throughout the cash account in at least two successive operations (see purchases of corn) and to the barley with dredge on the corn account and altered an entry of capons on the stock account.

At the audit: Hand xxx (i) entered disallowances, sales at the audit, with valuations, and other additions, alterations and notes throughout the corn and stock accounts, adding all missing totals and balances; (ii) entered alterations and notes throughout the cash account and added the provisional paragraph and grand totals in the margin; (iii) added the paragraphs for for. rec. and sales at the audit and definitive paragraph totals, grand totals and balance of cash; (iv) added the note of allowances and net balance at the end of the cash account.

After the audit: Hand xxx added the note of charge on the next account at the end of the front of the roll.

Bailiff's account, 22 July 1357–22 July 1358 MM 5886

The top of the roll is damaged and partly missing.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxx (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals from the cash account (the marginal total beside the charge total of oats suggests that the definitive total and the last entry in the paragraph are additions, but their appearance on the manuscript does not support this); (ii) added entries throughout the cash account.

At the audit: Hand xxx (i) entered disallowances, sales at the audit, with valuations, and other alterations throughout the corn and stock accounts;

(ii) entered alterations and notes throughout the cash account, added the paragraphs of for. rec. and sales at the audit, paragraph totals, grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: Hand xxx added the note of charge on the next account at the end of the front of the roll.

Bailiff's account, 22 July 1358–30 Sept. 1359 MM 5887

The account was originally drawn up for the year ending 22 July 1359, as stated in its heading, but entries were subsequently added to cover a further ten weeks down to 29 September; this appears most clearly in the paragraphs for the Warden's and Fellows' exp. and for mixed corn. The inventory at the end of the account is dated 30 September 1359.

The account was compiled as follows:

Before the audit: Hand xxx (i) wrote the whole roll, omitting all totals and balances throughout and leaving many blank spaces for the insertion of figures and extra paragraphs; (ii) completed the roll, adding paragraphs, entries and figures throughout and, on the corn and stock accounts, all totals and balances, and added the list of equipment at the end of the stock account.

At the audit: Hand xxx (i) added the notes of crop yields and entered disallowances, sales at the audit, with valuations, and other alterations and notes throughout the corn and stock accounts; (ii) entered alterations and notes throughout the cash account and added the paragraph of sales at the audit and all paragraph totals; (iii) added the final entry to the paragraph for the Warden's and Fellows' exp., altering the total accordingly; (iv) added the grand totals and balance of cash.

After the audit: No alterations.

At the foot of the front of the membrane is the note 'Respice in tergo', and at the foot of the dorse, still in the same hand. 'Curia [de Cu]xh̀[am] anno regni regis Edwardi xxx . . .' The morrow of the Translation of St Thomas the Apostle in 1301 was Tuesday, 4 July, and the morrow of the Translation of St Thomas the Martyr Saturday, 8 July. Presumably the court was in fact held on the latter feast itself; the reference in the opening paragraph to the reeve's account for 25 July 1299–25 July 1300 (MM 5816) shows that the correct year is given in the heading.

APPENDIX II

THE BUILDINGS OF THE DEMESNE CURIA, 1276–1359

Unless otherwise stated all the information is taken from the reeves' and bailiffs' accounts, including draft accounts and views of account (Appendix I gives the references for those not included in the present edition). A conjectural plan of the curia is given in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 33.

A. DOMESTIC BUILDINGS

Hall: aula, magna aula

References: Full accounts for extensive re-building in 1293–94, 1331–32; other references in 1290–91, 1291–92, 1298–99, 1302–03, 1304–05, 1307–08, 1308–09, 1311, 1312–13, 1319–20, 1322–23, 1323–24, 1330–31, 1331–32, 1333–34, 1335–36, 1347–48, 1350–51, 1357–58.

Location: Adjoined the lord's room; between them was a gutter made of tin and lead with a stone flag (?tabula) below. It also adjoined the barnyard: in 1301–02 is a reference to a wall 'in curia grangie iuxta aulam'. In front ran a drain or ditch (fossata ante ostium aule).

Construction: Stone foundations; timber-framed, with walls of wattle and daub, whitewashed; roof tiled (over 2500 tiles), though in 1304–05 repaired 'cum veteribus cindulis'. No evidence of internal divisions, except perhaps that in 1311 a key was bought 'ad ceruram ostii camere retro ostium aule'.

Contents: Listed in 1349 (see no. 48) and 1359 (see no. 85).

References: No extensive reconstruction recorded, but frequent references from 1291–92 to 1339–40 and also in 1347–48, 1356–57, 1357–58 and 1358–59.

Location: Adjoined the hall (q.v.) and an unidentified domus iuxta cameram domini. Lay east to west: reference to mur' in fine orientali camere domini in 1357–58. Behind ran a ditch or drain (fossata retro cameram domini).

Construction: Formed only the upper part of the building: references to gradus magne camere made of wood. Building itself of stone, with a gable end (gabul', le gable); roof of shingles (over 7160 bought as replacements, 1296–1302). The surrounds of the door, at least, were made of freestone. Besides the magna fenestra fitted with iron bars, there were windows in the gable, while a new window was made in 1336–37; all were apparently unglazed but had wooden shutters. The roof was fitted with a gutter of tin and lead at least where it adjoined the hall and above the door. The door was fitted with a lock.

Contents: Listed in 1349 (see no. 48) and 1359 (see no. 85).

Latrine: garderoba, latrina

References: 1297–98, 1298–99, 1307–08, 1308–09, 1319–20, 1350–51.

Location: Probably an adjunct to the lord's room, since it was the only other room to be roofed with shingles.

Construction: Fitted with window (aera, fenestra), probably with wooden shutters; shingle roof, with gutter.

References: Extensive repairs in 1320–21, 1321–22, 1322–23; other references in 1293–94, 1297–98, 1299–1300, 1300–01, 1302–03, 1303–04, 1307–08, 1348–49.

Location: That it was above (not beyond) the main gate of the curia is shown by a reference in 1297–98 to magna porta sub camera predicta.

Construction: Built apparently of stone; the entry in 1297–98 'In pariet' de bordis... faciendis' may refer to an internal partition. Gable end (gable), repaired in 1307–08 with una petra que dicitur somer and 23 feet of other stone; tiled roof. Stairway (gradus) made of wood; door fitted with a lock.

Kitchen: coquina

References: 1291–92, 1293–94, 1298–99, 1300–01, 1302–03, 1304–05, 1305–06, 1307–08, 1309–10, 1312–13, 1316–17, 1330–31, 1347–48, 1348–49.

Location: Adjoined the room next to the kitchen.

Construction: Stone foundation; tiled roof. Wooden door, no mention of a lock.

Room next to the kitchen: solarium iuxta coquinam, solarium ad capud coquine, solarium

References: 1293–94, 1299–1300, 1309–10, 1311, 1312–13, 1346–47, 1350–51.

Location: Adjoined the kitchen, but not part of the same structure, since roofed with thatch, not tiles.

Construction: Thatched roof. Reference to wooden gradus solarii may refer to the steps to the lord's room.

Dairy: daeria, dayeria, dayria, camera daye

References: 1308–09, 1327–28.

Location: Probably under either the lord's room or the room next to the kitchen, as there is no record of its roof repairs.

Construction: Door fitted with a lock.

Contents: Listed in 1349 (see no. 48) and 1359 (see no. 85); in 1327–28 the multral' was repaired by the carpenter.

Bake-house: pistrina, domus pist'

References: Extensive repairs in 1320–21, 1321–22, 1322–23; other references in 1290–91 and 1306–07.

Location: No evidence.

Construction: Built of stone; tiled roof (9000 tiles bought for it, 1320–22). Wooden door, and probably one window, with shutters.

Contents: Listed in 1349 (see no. 48).

Cellar: cellarium

References: 1308–09, 1313–14.

Location: Probably under either the lord's room or the room next to the kitchen.

Construction: Door fitted with a lock.

Contents: Listed in 1349 (see no. 48).

Other buildings

domus iuxta cameram domini. Doorway repaired by mason, 1335–36; probably either the latrine or the room next to the kitchen.

B. FARM BUILDINGS

Old wheat-barn: grangia, magna grangia, grangia pro frumento

References: Frequent references from 1276 to 1323–24.

Location: Lay east to west (though in 1294–95 its two parts described as the eastern and southern).

Construction: Stone foundations and perhaps stone walls (two cementarii spent a week working on the paries magne grangie, 1322–23) but more likely wattle and daub (costs 'In Magnis gadys' and 'In virgis' bought 'ad parietem grang'' entered 1289–90); thatched roof. Two doors: references to parva porta (1304–05) and magnum ostium (1322–23).

Contents: The magna grangia is identified with the wheat-barn by the grain estimate roll of 1272 (no. 29) and the account indenture of 1299. After circa 1326 it was probably used for oats (see the oats-barn below).

Small barn: grangia minor, parva grangia, grangia pro avena

References: Frequent references from 1296–97 to 1323–24.

Location: Probably lay north to south: thatching 'ex parte orient'' and 'ex alia parte' in 1296–97.

Construction: Thatched roof. Door with hanging lock.

Contents: The grain estimate rolls (nos. 29, 32, 38) show that dredge, barley, peas and beans were normally stacked in the same barn as the oats. Probably either demolished or put to some quite different use after circa 1326 (see the oats-barn below).

Oats-barn: grangia pro avenis, vetus grangia, le chracch' grang'

References: Extensive re-building with additions in 1335–36; other references frequent from 1328–29 to 1358–59.

Location: This must be either the small barn or the old wheat-barn of the period before 1326; it was probably the latter. Before 1326 the two barns were usually distinguished as the small and the large barns; if the latter had been replaced by a still larger barn the old nomenclature would have continued naturally for the former, and the fact that after 1326 the two barns are only twice differentiated by size (in 1344–45 and 1358–59) suggests that it was the small barn that had been pulled down or converted to some other use, while the old wheat-barn, now the smaller of the two barns in use, was converted to an oats-barn.

Construction: Probably timber-framed (entry for carpentry on its walls 1338–39); thatched roof. In 1335–36 the reconstruction included building a porticus, with stone foundation, walls probably of wattle and daub and a tiled roof (8200 tiles and 250 crests and hepetyel).

New wheat-barn: nova grangia, grangia pro frumento, grangia, magna grangia

References: Frequent references from 1328–29 to 1358–59.

Location: Lay north to south, probably with one end near the garden: reference to door 'ad finem grangie versus gardinum', 1349. At one end it probably adjoined a wall: the cost of thatching mur' iuxta novam grangiam is entered in 1328–29.

Construction: Tiled roof. More than one door; they were fitted with locks.

Old granary: granarium (to 1318–19), gallinarium, domus pro gallinis (from 1318–19)

References: 1293–94, 1302–03, 1305–06, 1307–08, 1312–13, 1318–19, 1319–20, 1338–39, 1342–43, 1349–50.

Location: No evidence.

Construction: Possibly had walls of boards: bordneyl were bought in 1305–06 for repairing them. Roof apparently tiled (though in 1302–03 repaired with 350 sclat' and 6 crest').

Contents: When the new granary was built in 1318–19 the old was used as a hen-house: entry, in that year's account, 'In galinario cooperiendo quod factum fuit de veteri granario'.

New granary: granarium

References: account of its construction, 1318–19; other references, 1319–20, 1323–24, 1330–31, 1341–42, 1342–43, 1343–44, 1347–48, 1350–51, 1353–54, 1357–58, 1358–59.

Location: No evidence.

Construction: Apparently built wholly of wood (13 cartloads were used): no reference to stones for foundations or to wattle for walls, which were probably boarded. Tiled roof (3000 tiles and 150 hupetywel). Door fitted with a lock.

Straw-house: le strauhus, domus foragii, domus straminis

References: 1300–01, 1304–05, 1312–13, 1315–16, 1317–18, 1318–19, 1320–21, 1323–24. In 1328–29 a special paragraph 'Custus Noue domus' records the cost of 27 raftr' bought 'ad domum pro palea inponenda'; this may be the final item in the construction of a new straw-house (the account roll for the previous year is missing). There are no subsequent references to the straw-house, which would accord with its being newly re-built and thus in no need of repair.

Location: No evidence.

Construction: Reference to its submurus in 1312–13 suggests a stone foundation; timber-framed, with walls of wattle and daub; thatched roof.

Hay-house: heyhus, le heyhous, domus feni, domus pro feno, camera pro feno inponendo, solarium pro feno

References: In 1320–21, under the heading 'Expense noui edificii' are entered the expenses of a solarium pro feno, with additions in 1321–22 and 1322–23; these probably refer to an extensive reconstruction rather than to a completely new building, as there are no references to foundations or to the room below the hay-house, and the expenses of masons are 'ad emendandum parites dicti Solarij'. Other references, 1315–16, 1316–17, 1318–19, 1330–31, 1343–44, 1347–48, 1350–51.

Location: Occupied the upper part of a building; otherwise no evidence.

Construction: References before 1320–21 show that it had a thatched roof, was reached by a wooden stairway (gradus) and had a door fitted with a lock. As re-built it seems to have had stone walls, with a tiled roof (12,000 tiles, 50 crests and 100 hepetiel) and probably a wooden floor:

carpenter hired 'ad . . . tabulandum nouum solarium'. Note payment of carpenter 'pro viij copulis del heyhous plus quam fuit in conuencione' (presumably copula: tie-beam, not bay).

Stable: stabul'

References: 1339–40, 1347–48, 1356–57, 1358–59.

Location: May have adjoined or formed part of the new byre. In 1410 the homage presented that 'due spacie bouarie videlicet stabulum pro equis carectariis et domus pro carect' inponend' subito cum vent' in terram cecedit in defectu fundamenti eiusdem domus iuxta fossatam' (MM 5924 mem. 1). There had been difficulties over the foundation when the new byre was built: 'In submur' faciend' xvj s. j d. et tantum pro fundamento petendo' (1313–14). All the references to the stable relate to its fittings except in 1347–48, in a list of buildings that the tiler had worked on, where it is mentioned immediately after the byre.

Construction: Tiled roof. Door fitted with a lock.

Contents: Mangeres in stabul' were made by a carpenter in 1339–40.

Old byre: domus vaccarum et boum (before 1312–13), either bostar boum or bostar vaccarum (after 1312–13), boveria, bostar

References: 1290–91, 1294–95, 1297–98, 1300–01, 1304–05, 1305–06, 1308–09, 1309–10, 1312–13; and possibly also 1313–14, 1342–43, 1350–51, 1351–52.

Location: No evidence.

Construction: Probably timber-framed; walls of wattle and daub; thatched roof.

Contents: Probably continued in use after the construction of the new byre in 1312–13; in 1351–52 repairs were made to the walls of both the bostar boum and the bostar vaccarum, but there is no way of telling which was which. Carpenters made presepia boum (1313–14) and staciones vaccarum (1350–51) in the byre, either the old or the new.

New byre: nova boveria, boveria, bostar, either bostar boum or bostar vaccarum

References: Account of its construction, 1312–13 and 1313–14; other references in 1319–20, 1331–32, 1338–39, 1341–42, 1347–48, and possibly also in 1313–14, 1342–43, 1350–51, 1351–52.

Location: May have included the stable, q.v.

Construction: Stone foundation; timber-framed, probably with walls of wattle and daub; tiled roof (15,000 tiles, 150 crests and hupetiwel). Two doors (probably double, or even four doors in all, as eight hooks and hinges were bought for them in 1313–14), fitted with locks.

Contents: See the old byre, above.

Cart-house: domus carectarum

References: Built in 1294–95; other references in 1311, 1319–20.

Location: Although built at the same time as a hen-house and pig-sty it was probably a separate building, as they are referred to (1294–95) as easdem domus, in the plural. Note that the court roll of 1410 (see the stable, above) suggests that part of the new byre built in 1312–14 was used as a cart-house.

Construction: Walls of wattle and daub; thatched roof.

Pig-sty: domus porcorum, porcar'

References: Built in 1294–95; other references in 1318–19, 1329–30.

Location: See the cart-house above.

Construction: Timber-framed; probably boarded walls (wattling is specifically mentioned only of the cart-house in the building account); thatched roof. Fitted with door.

Dovecotes: columbaria

References: One partially re-built in 1315–16, and again in 1323–24; a completely new one built in 1344–45, 1345–46. Other references in 1299–1300, 1307–08, 1311, 1317–18, 1357–58.

Location: No evidence. There were probably two from the beginning of the period of the accounts: in 1307–08 stones were bought 'pro emendacione ij columbariorum'.

Construction: Apparently all built of stone; tiled roofs. Note references to purchases of clate (1315–16), virge (1323–24), 'pro le Steyring' Columbar''.

Other buildings

domus iuxta portam gardini. Detailed account of its construction in 1306–07: timber-framed, walls of wattle and daub, roof probably thatched. No evidence to identify it with any of the buildings described above.

domus gallinarum. Built, 1294–95, by carpenter, probably with thatched roof; no subsequent reference. From 1317–18 the old granary (q.v.) was used as a hen-house.

domus que vocatur Malthus. Repairs to its roof (thatched) entered in 1303–04; no other reference.

domus ovium. The cost of its hinges entered in 1322–23; no other reference. Perhaps a room temporarily adapted for ewes during lambing.

APPENDIX III

AMOUNTS OF SEED SOWN PER ACRE, 1297–1358

The figures are taken from the reeves' and bailiffs' accounts, including draft accounts, from 1297–98 to 1357–58 (Appendix I gives the references for those not included in the present edition). The amounts are given in bushels to the nearest $\frac{1}{4}$ bus.; + and − indicate a remainder. The figures are those actually given in the accounts, even though in a few cases these do not tally with the acreage and total seed sown; where the account gives the area sown, but no figure for the amount of seed per acre, this has been calculated and is put here in square brackets. Where the figure on the account has been altered by the auditors the original figure is given here, followed by the amended figure in round brackets.

APPENDIX IV

TYPES OF CORN SOWN, 1278–1359

A. ACREAGE SOWN WITH EACH CROP, 1278–1358

The figures are taken from the view of account for 1278–79 and the reeves' accounts, including draft accounts, from 1297–98 to 1357–58 (see Appendix I for the references). Except where noted, wheat was sown in one of the village's three fields, all the other crops in another; where the figure is given in italics the field is not specified in the document, but there is no reason to suppose that these cases represent departures from the normal course of rotation. No acreages are given on the account for 1358–59. The total acreage sown in each field and the rotation of crops are set out in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 164–5.

B. PERCENTAGE OF THE SPRING-CORN FIELD SOWN WITH EACH CROP, 1298–1359

The following table gives the area sown with each type of corn in the spring-corn field, expressed as percentages of the total area sown there each year. It is based on the acreages set out above, except in 1357–59 for which some further approximate percentages are given based on the amounts of seed sown. The total percentage sometimes varies from 100.0 because of rounding.

ANNUAL CROP YIELDS PER QUARTER SOWN, 1289–1358

The amounts sown and threshed, and the yields as noted on the rolls themselves, are taken from the reeves' and bailiffs' accounts from 1288–89 to 1358–59 (Appendix I gives the references for those not included in the present edition). The amount of seed sown to produce a crop and the amount threshed from its produce are entered on the accounts for different financial years; accordingly the calculations can be made only where accounts survive for two consecutive years or, in the case of wheat which was often threshed more than a year after it was harvested, for three successive years. The amounts of corn are given here in quarters with decimals, not in quarters and bushels. In calculating the yield one-ninth has been added to the total issue to allow for corn taken in tithe. Decennial and overall yields, with a comparison of figures from other manors, are set out in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., p. 58.

APPENDIX VI

DEMESNE LIVESTOCK, 1271–1359

Unless otherwise stated the figures are of stock on demesne at the end of the year of account late in July. They are taken from the reeves' and bailiffs' accounts, including draft accounts, from 1276 to 1358–59, the view of account for 1276–77, the list of stock of 1279, the indentures of account for 1290, 1291, 1294, 1295 and 1300, and the combined account of grain and stock for 1333–37 (Appendix I gives the references for those not included in the present edition).

APPENDIX VII

PERSONS NAMED IN UNPUBLISHED DOCUMENTS, 1282–1348

Listed below are references to persons mentioned by name in those records of Cuxham's internal administration before 1360 that are not included in the present edition, i.e. the documents listed in Appendix I, where full references are given. The list is comprehensive, except that King Edward II, King Edward III and Queen Philippa are excluded; they are mentioned in nearly all the documents from the relevant periods, usually with reference to their officers' visits and purveyances (see Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 109–12). All variant forms of surname found in the documents are given, and there are full cross-references in the Index. The Wardens, Sub-wardens, Bursars, Fellows, Warden's Hall and Great Hall mentioned are all of Merton College. Unless the type of document is named before the date every reference is to the reeve's account covering the date in question (including the draft account or view of account if either survives); the paragraphs of the account where the person is named are given in brackets. Where a similar entry occurs in the same paragraph in two or more accounts, the reference is given in the form '1342–3, 1344–5 (oats)' or, if the accounts are consecutive, '1342–4 (oats)'. Entries are given in italics if there is doubt whether they refer to the same person as the other entries under the heading. Men's Christian names are abbreviated; the other abbreviations used are listed on pp. xv–xvi.

WORD LIST WITH GLOSSARY

The following list comprises:

1. Notes on the transcription and extension of particular words and grammatical forms from the forms found in the manuscripts, as described on pp. 8–10. The evidence found in the texts for a particular usage is given in parentheses, beginning 'MSS.:'; unless it concludes 'etc.' the examples given are all that have been noted.

2. A glossarial index to all words or spellings that are not included in either C. T. Lewis and C. Short, Latin dictionary (1879) or R. E. Latham, Revised medieval Latin word-list (1965); these words, printed in bold type, thus include all English words found in the texts as well as all unrecorded Latin words or spellings. Omitted from this glossarial index are (i) words that form part of the name of a person or place; (ii) words or spellings that are probably clerical errors and are noted (with or without question-mark) in the footnotes to the text; (iii) words made up of a preposition and a noun written together (e.g. 'inmorina') unless they are clearly regarded as a single compound word; (iv) any words included in Latham, op. cit., even though they are recorded there only from a different period or from glossaries.

The case, number, etc., of cited words are given only where these are known from the external evidence of the context, not just from the form of the word itself. Where a word is cited in italics it is understood to cover all inflexions. References are to the numbers of the documents; in the case of accounts a note of the relevant paragraph is added in parentheses. For the abbreviations used in references to dictionaries, etc., see pp. xv–xvi.

A. INDIVIDUAL WORDS

absens: absent. ass' 105, 109, 111 may represent a form of this word.

acer, etc.: steel. Hand xii writes arc', arcerr' gen. s. 58–63 (costs of ploughs in each). For hands vi, xxi, xxviii extended as 2nd decl. (MSS.: 'asseri' gen. s. 68 (costs of ploughs); 'acero' abl. s. 31 (exp.), 57, 80 (costs of ploughs in each)). For other hands extended as 3rd decl. though there is evidence for this only in hands v, xxiii (MSS.: 'acerem', 'accerem' acc. s. 75, 81 (costs of ploughs in each); 'aceris' gen. s. 71, 81 (costs of ploughs in each); 'acere' abl. s. 30, 73, 75, 77, 78 (costs of ploughs in each)). For hand xii extended with rr (MS.: 'Arcerr'' gen. s. 58 (costs of ploughs)). Hand xxi once writes 'asserr'', 67 (for. exp.), but 'asseri' on 68 (costs of ploughs), so extended with single r.

adiunct-: addition (of livestock from one grade to another). For hand xvii extended as adiunctum, sing. if a single item, pl. if more than one (MS.: 'adiunctis' abl. pl. 64 (chicks)). For other hands extended as adiunctura, followed where necessary by gen., though there is evidence for this only in hand xxiii (MSS.: 'de adiunctura annalium' 70 (young oxen); etc.).

afferator, affirator: affeerer. Never extended on the MSS. 'affir'' extended to affiratores, 'affer'', 'aff'' to afferatores.

affrus: draught horse. Never extended on the MSS. in nom. s., but 'affr'' nom. s. occurs on 129, 133.

agnus: lamb. 'agn'' in lana agn', pelles agn', extended throughout to 'agnorum', though evidence for this only in hand xxiii (MSS.: 'Lana agnorum' 69 (lambs' wool); 'pelles agnorum' 70 (lambs' skins); etc.). In sing., pellis agn', extended to 'agni'; never extended on the MSS.

alius, alia, aliud: other. alium neut. nom. s.(?) 82 (note after cash balance); aliut neut. acc. s. 27; alium neut. acc. s. 88; alii masc. gen. s. 67 (hens).

allec: herring. Extended throughout as a collective sing. noun, masc. or fem. (which gender is never shown on the MSS.) (MS.: 'allece' abl. s. 73 (steward's exp.)). Hand xii writes 'allec' abl. on 59 (Walter's exp.; harvest exp.), but 'allec'' gen. or abl. on 62 (petty exp.) and acc. on 63 (oats). Hand xxvi writes 'allec' acc. on 78 (visitors' exp., oats).

alloc-: allowance. For hand xvii extended to allocancia (MSS.: 'allocancia' abl. s. 64 (reeve's allowances); etc.). For other hands extended as allocacio (pl. in headings and grand totals). In both cases followed where necessary by gen. (MSS.: 'in alloc' eiusdem' 59 (reeve's allowances); etc.). Hand xxiii once writes 'allocanciam' acc. s. on 54, and 'Alloc' petenda' as heading on 79 (reeve's allowances).

alter, altera, alterum: other. Hand xii possibly writes alteri masc. gen. s. 58 (mixed corn): see lib-.

amariss' abl., ameroke abl.: mayweed (KMED amarusca, ameroch), 57 (petty exp.), 68 (hoeing and mowing).

anas: duck. Hand xxi writes anate nom. pl. 67, 68 (ducks in each). For hand xii taken to be masc. on 60, 61 only (MSS.: 'antiqui' 60 (ducks), 'duo' 61 (issue of ducks), but 'quarum' 62 (ducks)).

antecessor: predecessor. antesessoribus abl. pl. 16.

aper: boar. apr' nom. s. 59 (pigs) and, possibly, 62, 66 (boars in each).

appretio: to value. apresciatur pres. indic. 106.

croft-: croft, plot. craftho abl. s. 5. Extended throughout to crofta (MSS.: 'de j croft' terre dimissa . . . que fuit . . .' 81 (issues of manor); 'crofta' abl. s. 103).

croftlond abl.: land divided up into small fields or, possibly, the name of a furlong (KMED croft-lond, sub croft), 88.

cubacione abl.: hatching (of birds), 69–74, 77–79 (eggs in each), 81 (malt, geese, eggs).

cum prep. with abl.: with. 'cum custus fald'' occurs on 80 (petty exp.). See also onero.

cumul- noun or past part.: heaped measure or heaped. In corn accounts on 82–85, extended to past part., 'cumulato', in phrase 'viij° bussello cumul'' otherwise to pl. noun, cumuli.

cund' acc., cundam acc.: right of inheritance (OED kind sb (1b)), 131, 132.

cupe abl. s.: wicker body of cart (KMED coupe n (1); cf. duccup below), 85 (costs of carts).

curallum, corallum, scurallum and oblique cases: small corn, of wheat, passim, unless another corn specified, as barley, beans, dredge and peas 59–61, pulse 66 (Harvey Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 46–7). Extended throughout to forms in -allum; never extended in nom. s. on the MSS.

curbes or curles abl. pl.: curved pieces of wood (?: OED curb sb(9), curl sb(2)), 68 (costs of mill).

curtana: short cart. curtinam acc. 58 (costs of ploughs).

custimarius, etc.: customary tenant. custim' nom., cust' acc., gen.: customary services, 61 (sale of works, wheat, currall), 62 (sale of works). For hands x, xi, xvii, xxiii, extended to custumarius (MSS.: 'custumar'' gen. 86, abl. 35 (wheat); 'Custumar'' abl. 42, 43; 'Custum'' dat. 64 (sale of wheat); etc.). For other hands extended to custimarius (MSS.: 'Custimar'' nom. 58 (sale of works); etc.).

custodia: watch, care. Extended thus throughout (MSS.: 'custodie' gen. 83 (geese), 85 (draught horses)).

custus: cost, expense. Extended as 2nd decl., so that the frequent 'Custus' in paragraph headings on the MSS. is taken as sing. (MS.: 'custis' abl. pl. 36). 'Custu' abl. occurs on 72 (harvest exp.), and 'cum custus falde' on 80 (petty exp.).

cutemou, cutmeys, cutmowe, cutmoye, see cotemou.

daer' nom., gen., dat.: dairymaid or dairyman, 58–63 passim in wages, wheat, barley, mixed corn and cheese paragraphs.

daeria, etc.: dairy. Extended throughout to forms in -ia (MSS.: 'dayriam' acc. 48; 'dayerie' gen. 67 (sales of dairy produce)).

la daie nom., gen., le daie gen., la daye gen.: dairymaid or dairyman (KMED daie), 69–74 passim in threshing, wages, wheat, barley and mixed corn paragraphs, 76, 77 (threshing, wages, in each), 78, 79, 81 (wages in each). The forms in 'le' occur only on 72 and 73, but as forms in 'la' also occur there they probably do not imply a difference in sex.

Davidus: man's name. Extended thus where written with a suspension mark; never extended on the MSS.

daye gen. s.: dairy (?: cf. 'daerie' on the MS. in previous heading), 62 (cheese).

de prep. with abl.: of. Hand x writes 'de Robertus' 101, 103, but also 'de Roberto' 103. Hand xii writes 'de insulam' 61 (hens) and twice 'de opera' 63 (sale of works). See also clarus.

decepit perf. indic., with dat.: to take away (from), 88.

defalt-: default. Extended throughout to defalta, in sing. unless context unambiguously demands pl. form (MS.: 'defaltam' acc. 97).

defectus: loss or fault. defectum nom. s. 88; defestu abl. 30 (peas).

depasco: to feed. depascuunt pres. (? perf.) indic. 112.

depopulauit perf. indic.: to reduce the number of people present, 117.

depositarius: receiver. Extended throughout to pl. (MSS.: 'eosdem' 63 (cash liveries); 'depositariis' 67 (cash liveries); 'eisdem' 84 (cash liveries)).

deseritisacione, desheredationem, see dishereditatio.

dico: to say. discitur pres. indic. 25, 27, 67 (barley).

dies masc. or fem.: day. For hand xxiii on 69–71 treated throughout as masc. except with 'proxim'', the consistent usage where extended on these three MSS. (MSS.: 'a dicto die Lune', 'a die Lune proxima', 70 (cheese); etc.). Otherwise treated as in Classical Latin, i.e. masc. unless it means a set day. There is great inconsistency on the MSS., which can be exemplified from hand xvii by the cheese paragraph on 64, where in almost every case the gender is clearly indicated on the MS., and from hand xxi by 'a dicto die dominica', 67 (cheese). In general the MSS. tend to use masc. where classical usage demands fem. rather than the opposite (MSS.: 'a die predicto' 59 (cheese); 'a xxvij^{mo} die Iulij' 80 (cheese); 'a xiij^{o} die Aprilis' 81 (cheese); etc.).

dimid-: half. Treated throughout as adjective, dimidius, -a, -um, not as noun, dimidium; no extended examples to the contrary on the MSS.

dishereditatio: d[illegible]erison, dispossession. deseritisacione abl. 103; desheredationem acc. 89.

distr- noun or verb: distress or distraint; to distrain. districciones nom. pl. 129, 130; distrincio nom. s. 101; dristingatur pres. subj. 89. On the court rolls extended to 'distrinccio' in the margins, to 'distringatur', 'distringantur' in the body of the text wherever this fits the context (MSS.: 'distrinccio' 94; 'distringatur' 94, 106; etc.).

do: to give. 'dand'' introducing amount given per unit extended throughout to 'dando' (MSS.: 'dando per noctem' 72 (oats); 'dando pro singulis' 77 (threshing); 'dando pro quarterio' 84 (threshing); etc.).

domin- noun or adj.: demesne lands; demesne or of the lord. From abbreviated forms with c extended to adj., dominicus, -a, -um, if there is an accompanying noun, otherwise to sing. noun dominicum (MSS.: 'in dominico' 27; 'anunciacionis d'nice' 62 (wages); 'terr' d'nica' 145; etc.). 'de d'nicis' occurs on 145. From abbreviated forms without c extended throughout to noun, dominium (MS.: 'dominio' abl. 127).

dominus: lord of manor. Extended throughout to sing. (the normal usage of the documents although Cuxham had a corporate lord).

domus: house, building. Extended to 'domos' in acc. pl., 'domorum' in gen. pl. (MSS.: 'domos' acc. pl. 16, 86; 'Cust' domorum' 64, 82 (costs of buildings in each); etc.). Treated throughout as fem. (MSS.: 'Noue domus' gen. s. 71 (for. exp.); 'in domo sua' 88; etc.). 'ad domos . . . emendendos' occurs on 16, 'domos suos' on 86.

drag-: dredge, mixed corn of barley and oats. For hand xvii extended to dragettum (MSS.: 'Dragett'' nom. 64, 65 (dredge in each); etc.). For other hands extended to dragetum (MSS.: 'Dragetum' nom. 35, 68 (dredge in each); 'drageto' abl. 41; etc.). 'dragium' nom. occurs on 132.

drasc-, etc.: draff, malt dregs. drafc' gen. 83 (petty exp.). Extended throughout to drascum; never extended on the MSS. except that hand xxi writes 'drachii' gen. 67, 68 (petty exp. in each).

draye nom. s.: cart body (?: OED dray sb^{1}), 48.

duccup or ductup acc. s.: dung-cart, sled (?: OED coup sb^2; MFG dongecoupe; cf. cupe above), 60 (costs of carts).

duco: to lead. ducit versus pres. indic.: to go to (of a road), 28.

dungcart acc.(?), dongcart nom.(?): dung-cart (OED dung-cart), 37.

duodecim: twelve. duodecem 63 (oats).

ecclesia: church. Its significance is obscure in the reference to the Warden's men driving cows 'ad Ecclesiam suam', 66 (for. exp.); the intention may be humorous.

Edwardus: man's name. Extended from 'E' only in the case of the king's name.

ego: I. See mihi.

emend-: amends or repair. In sense of 'amends' extended to emende, in pl. (MS.: 'emendas' acc. 90). In sense of 'repair' extended to emendacio (MSS.: 'Emendacio domorum' nom. 72–74 (repair of buildings in each); etc.).

emendo, 1st conj.: to repair. Hand xxiii consistently treats as 2nd or 3rd conj. (MSS.: emendend' ger. 69 (petty exp., costs of mill); etc.). emendendos ger. also occurs on 16.

emp- noun or past part.: purchase or bought. In paragraph headings extended to empcio with gen. (emptio for hand xvii) if it is thus the first noun in the heading, otherwise to emptus, -a, -um (MSS.: 'Empt' bladi' 65; 'Empcio blad'' 71; 'bladum empt'' 68; etc.).

ennis abl.: part of plough, probably of plough-share (no related word traced), 78 (costs of ploughs).

entys abl., abl. pl.: saplings (MLWL enta), 58, 63 (petty exp.).

Epiphania: Epiphany. Eph'ia on hands xii, xxiii, extended to Ephania (MS.: ephanie gen. 63 (visitors' exp.)).

equ-: equal. Extended throughout as 'eque' where it occurs as the balance of an item in corn or stock account (MSS.: 'eque' 35 (barley), 75 (vetch), 80 (butter), etc.).

equin': of a horse. See ferrum.

equus: horse. equor' nom. pl.(?) 60 (cart horses)

esperverius: sparrow-hawk. Never extended on the MSS. (MSS.: 'esperuer'' gen. 78 (cocks and hens); etc.).

essonia: essoin. On the court rolls extended to pl., essonie, in the margins; never extended in the margins on the MSS.

estimatio and oblique cases: estimate of amount (of corn), passim on the MSS. written in hands iv, xvii, xxi, xxiii, xxx.

estimatur, estimantur pres. indic., est', estim', estimat' past part., estimar' inf.: to estimate (corn, damages, lands), 25, 38, 60 (oats), 83 (berevechicorn with oats), 85 (oats), 90, 115.

etas: age. etate gen., twice, 67 (piglets).

excessu abl.: surplus (GMIL excessus 1), 57 (before cash liveries).

exennium: gift. ixen' abl. 62 (sale of works). Extended to sing. throughout, and followed by gen. for the donor, dat. for the recipient and gen. for the thing given (MSS.: 'de exennio panis' 64 (sale of works); 'de exenn' eiusdem' 60 (reeve's allowances); 'ad exenn' episcopo lincoll'' 60 (gifts); etc.). 'pro suis exenn'' occurs on 61 (sale of works).

exigo: to demand. exigerit perf. subj.(?) 100.

expens-: expenses. Extended to sing., expensa, in grand totals of cash on accounts earlier than 1300, otherwise to pl., expense (MSS.: 'Summa tocius expense' 64 (cash discharge total); 'Expens' neccessarie' 64, 69 (petty exp. in each); 'Summa omnium expensarum', 68, 84 (cash discharge total in each); etc.). 'in expensis' followed by gen., the normal usage of the MSS., but dat. occurs in 'Magistro' 65 (hens), 'petro' 67 (hens).

extracte: estreats. Never extended beyond 'extract'' on the MSS.

fabe: beans. Extended throughout to pl.

faber: smith. Extended throughout to sing. on the assumption that only one smith was at work at Cuxham at any time (MSS.: 'In stipend' fabri' 30 (costs of ploughs, carts); 'per tall' contra fabrum' 64 (costs of ploughs)).

facio: to do, make. facere legem inf.: to make good a claim at law, 89.

fagus: beech-tree. 'dictarum fag'', treating it (correctly) as fem., occurs on 71 (for. exp.).

falc-: mowing. faltur' abl. 30 (hoeing and mowing). For hand xxiii extended to falcacio (MS.: 'opus falcacionis' 117).

falx: sickle or scythe. falxis abl. pl. 62 (petty exp.).

fam-: servant or household. Extended throughout to famulus, in sing. unless context unambiguously demands pl. form. familia occurs on 69 (capons, hens), 70 (eggs), 85 (hens, chicks, offal) and possibly 70 (harvest exp.).

felies acc. pl., abl.(?): felloe of wheel (OED felloe), 67, 68 (costs of carts in each).

ferr-: ironwork. ferramento, ferram't', ferr' abl. s.: pair of iron tyres for cart wheels, 57, 64, 72 (costs of carts in each), 48. ferr' caruc' extended to pl., ferramenta carucarum, for hand xvii, otherwise to sing., ferramentum carucarum (MSS.: 'Ferram't' caruc'' 57 (costs of ploughs); 'pro dictis ferr' repand'' 64 (costs of ploughs); 'ferram' caruc'' 82–85 (costs of ploughs in each); etc.).

ferrum: iron. ferr' de Spaynia gen.: Spanish iron, 67 (costs of ploughs). ferr' equin' abl., abl. pl.: horse-shoes, 80 (costs of carts), 81 (shoeing horses), 82, 84 (costs of carts in each), 85 (costs of ploughs).

fetose fem. nom. pl.: pregnant, 79 (calves). On 81 (calves) the same clerk (hand xxiii) writes fetosa fem. nom. s. to mean 'barren', perhaps a slip for 'infetosa' (itself an unrecorded word).

fides lesa: breach of faith. fidelesione abl. 85 (for. exp.).

fimifurc' nom. s., gen. s.: muck-fork, 83 (petty exp.), 85 (equipment).

fimus: dung, manure. Extended throughout to pl., fimi (MSS.: 'fimorum' gen. 71 (petty exp.); 'fimis' abl. 78 (petty exp.); etc.). Hand xii writes 'fimum' acc. 61 (petty exp.), 63 (costs of carts). Hand xviii writes 'fimum' acc. 95, 99, but 'fimos' acc. 97.

firma: rent. Extended to sing. in documents before 1320, otherwise to pl. (MSS.: 'Firma' nom. 63 (rent of mill), 66 (rents), 68 (rent of mill); 'Firme' nom. 71 (rents); 'firmis' abl. 81 (rents); etc.).

le flodgate acc., del flodgate gen., del flodyat gen., flodyate acc., del fludgate gen.: sluice-gate (KMED flod-yate), 70, 77–79 (costs of mill in each), 105.

focale: fuel. Never extended beyond 'focal'' on the MSS.

fodio: to dig. Hand xvi writes fodiavit perf. indic. (struck out) 89, fodiit perf. indic. 89, 91, fodiauit perf. indic. 92.

fogett' nom. s.: small pruning knife or small mattock (MLWL voga), 48.

folmerde abl., hulm'dum acc.: polecat (OED foumart), 61 (hens), 67 (ducks).

forag-: fodder or straw. forag' extended throughout to foragium (MS.: 'foragii' gen. 68 (costs of buildings)). 'foragio' abl. with a line above occurs on 68 (petty exp.). Hand xxiii writes 'forag'is' gen. 70, 71 (petty exp. in each).

forewynschouele fem. noun, nom. s.: furrowing shovel (OED shovel sb, furrow sb, v), 48.

forins-, etc.: forinsec, external. Extended throughout to forms in -ecus, -eca, -ecum, for hand xxiii with preceding c, otherwise s.

forpices pl. noun: shears or scissors. forpic' nom. s. 85 (equipment), gen. s. 66 (petty exp.).

forrur', forr', forur' nom. s.: furlong in open field, 28. Extended to forms in -ura.

forum: market. dies for' extended throughout to dies fori; never extended on the MSS.

fraxinus: ash-tree. frerc' acc. 63 (petty exp.). Hand xxiii writes 'paruam fraxinum' acc., treating it (correctly) as fem., on 123 and similarly 'quedam' on 130. Hand x writes both 'vnam fraxinem' and 'idem fraxin'' nom. s. on 106.

fretta: band round hub of wheel. fret abl. s 63 (costs of carts). Never extended on the MSS.

fructus: fruit. Extended throughout to sing. (MSS. 'de toto fruct'' 65 (issues of manor); 'fructu' abl. 66 (issues of manor)). 'fructus' acc. pl. occurs on 3, but with metaphorical meaning.

fugacione caruc' abl.: driving animals at plough, 42, 43.

fugat-, etc.: driver of plough. Extended throughout to fugator; never extended on the MSS. beyond fugat' (66 (wages), etc.) apart from fugatarum gen. pl. 59 (wages), 'fugancium' gen. pl. 60 (wages), 'fugatorum' gen. pl. 72 (wages).

full-: fulling or fuller. In molendinum full' extended throughout to fullonis (MSS.: 'Fullonis' 73, 74 (rents of mills in each); etc.). 'Molendinum fullonic'' nom. occurs on 116.

furc-, etc.: fork. Extended to forms in -a; never extended on the MSS.

furn-, etc.: to bake. furniat' past part., furniand' ger.: to supply, 67 (wheat, pepper). Extended throughout to 1st conj. forms in -io (MS.: 'Furniatum' 67 (wheat); etc.). 'In pane furn'' extended throughout to past part., 'furniato', not ger.; never extended on the MSS. apart from 'furnito' 41, 80 (wheat), 'furnit'' 82 (wheat).

fusill-, etc.: mill-spindle. fisill' gen. s. 78 (costs of mill); fusi abl. 108. Extended throughout to forms in -illum; never extended on the MSS.

le gable acc.: gable of house (OED gable), 84 (wheat).

gad abl. s., gadys abl. pl.: goad or stake (OED gad sb[1], goad sb[1]; KMED gadde), 59 (petty exp.), 61 (costs of ploughs).

gall-: cock or hen. Extended throughout to gallina unless context makes it likely that gallus intended.

garc-, etc.: boy, servant. Extended throughout to forms in -io (MSS.: 'garc'onibus' 64 (for. exp.); etc.).

garderob-: latrine. Extended throughout to forms in -a; never extended on the MSS.

gardin-: garden. Extended throughout to sing., gardinum (MS.: 'Gardino' abl. 78 (issues of manor, petty exp.)).

gariofilum: clove. gariophili gen. 17.

gore abl. s.: triangular piece of land (OED gore sb[2]), 68 (harvest exp.).

granar-: granary. Extended throughout to sing., granarium.

granat' past part.: to reckon for yield, 85 (vetch with berevechicorn).

grangia: barn. There were two barns on the manor, but when the word is used without specific reference to the buildings, as in exitus grang', it is extended throughout to sing. (MSS.: 'Exitus grangie' 63 (top of dorse); 'de toto exit' grangie' 64 (barley, peas); etc.).

gray masc. acc. s.: grey (of a horse) (OED grey), 145.

gropa: iron clamp, especially for mending cart-wheels. crop' abl., cropis abl., grope abl.(?) s., gropes abl. pl., gropiis abl., gropys abl. 57–59, 61, 63, 66, 70 (costs of carts in each).

le hacch' acc.: half-door (OED hatch sb[1]), 82 (costs of buildings, wheat).

hachet nom. s.: hatchet (OED hatchet), 48.

haia: hedge. Hand x writes 'quendam hayam' 94, 100, but also 'dicta haya' 100.

haras gen.: peas and vetch mixed (MLWL haracium 2), 84 (peas with vetch, oats).

harn-:harness. harnec' abl. 59 (equipment); hernisi gen. 78 (hides). Extended throughout to sing. forms in -ium, with er and s (MSS.: 'hernesium' acc. 68 (costs of carts); 'hernesio' abl. 67 (costs of carts)). 'herenes'' gen. occurs on 78 (hides).

hechel' nom. s.: an implement for combing flax or hemp (OED hatchel), 48.

heme herde gen. s.: villagers' herdsman (?: KMED heme), 67 (mixed corn).

Henricus: man's name. Extended from 'H' only in the case of the king's name.

herbag-: hay or right of pasturage or payment for pasturage. Extended throughout to sing., herbagium (MS.: 'herbagii' gen. 27).

herc-: harrow. Extended throughout to hercia.

heriet-, etc.: heriot. Extended throughout to forms in er, -um (MSS.: 'herietto' abl. s. 94; 'heriettum' nom. s. 112; etc.).

hernisi, see harn-.

hesa: hedge. haysciam acc. s. 103 (where it is used as the equivalent of 'sepem' in 102).

le heyhous acc.: hay-house (OED hay-house), 78 (repair of buildings).

heyre abl. s.: piece of haircloth (KMED here n(2)), 35 (petty exp.).
heyward gen.: hayward (KMED hei-ward), 67 (harvest exp.).
hockeday acc., abl., hockeday' acc., le hockeday acc., le hock' acc., hokeday acc., abl., hokedey acc., hoked' abl.: hock-day, second Tuesday after Easter (OED hock-day), 58 (visitors' exp., fodder-corn), 64 (sale of wheat), 66 (sale of currall), 67 (oats), 71 (sale of wheat, sale of stock, cows), 82 (wheat, dredge with vetch, mixed corn), 140.
hog-: pig in its second year. Extended throughout to forms in -ettus (MSS.: 'hoggett'', possibly 'hoggetti', nom. pl. 79 (young pigs); 'hogett'' abl. s. 78 (sale of stock); 'Hogett'' abl. pl. 78 (piglets)).
hogaster: sheep in its second year. hogastr' nom. s. 85 (wethers); hokastris abl. pl. 62 (sale of stock). Extended throughout as 2nd decl. (MS.: 'hogastro' abl. s. 67 (young sheep)).
hoked', hokeday, hokedey, see hockeday.

hurt-: ram. Extended throughout to hurtardus (MS.: 'hurtard'' nom. s., abl. s. 70 (rams)).
hurteles abl. pl., hurtels abl. pl.: iron plates to protect axle 67 (for. exp.), 85 (costs of carts); 'hurcell'' gen. pl. occurs on 73 (costs of carts). All the forms of the word given by OED (sub hurter sb^2), KMED (sub hurtour) and Drew, Notes, have r, not l, in the second syllable, but those given by MLWL (sub hurtardus) include hurtellum, and there is little doubt that the word is correctly identified: each of the Cuxham references is to the acquisition of two, and on 73 they are specifically made of iron.
hypetyl abl., hepetiel abl. pl., hupetywel abl. pl., huptihil abl. pl.: hip-tiles, tiles shaped to cover the ridge or edges of a roof (Salzman, Build. in Eng., p. 231), 62 (costs of hall), 66 (petty exp.), 68 (costs of new granary), 84 (costs of buildings).
idem, eadem, idem: the same. In masc., fem. acc. sing. and in gen. pl. extended throughout with n, not m. The MSS. are inconsistent: 'eorundem' and 'eamdem' both occur on 17, 'eundem' and 'eumdem' on 65 (wheat).
in prep. with acc. or abl.: in or into, etc. Where animals go (ire, currere) into pasture, stubble, etc., the following noun is extended to abl. (MSS.: 'euntibus in stipula' 64 (issues of manor); etc.). In the phrase 'in man' domini' man' is extended only in italics (see manus). With these exceptions the noun following in is extended to acc. or abl. according to the usage of Classical Latin. The usage of the MSS. is not consistent with this, however; thus hand xxiii writes 'solut' in partem solucionis' 79 (for. exp.), 'venit in Curia' 120, 'pro ingressu habend' in dicto Mesuagio' 121, while hand xviii writes 'tenuit bidentes in prato domini' and 'tenuit boues in prata domini' in successive sentences on 99. The clerk has made an alteration to change the case of a noun following in on 64 (oats) and, probably, 69 (note after cash balance).
incrementum and oblique cases: (1) addition to the amount of corn accounted for to allow for heaping of measures etc. (Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 53–6), 65, 78, 82–85 passim in corn account in each. (2) increase in bulk of corn on malting (Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 70–1), 67–73, 75, 79, 81 (malt in each).
indentura: indenture. Extended throughout to sing. unless context unambiguously demands pl. form (MS.: 'per indenturam' 69 (doves)); cf. tallia.
indules abl.: part of cart-wheel, probably felloes (KMED doule), 68 (costs of carts).
infetosa, see fetosa.
inquisitio: judicial inquiry. inquisicicionem acc. occurs three times on 93, but also 'inquisicio' nom. s.
insero: to plant or to graft. incerend' ger. 58 (petty exp.).
instaur-: stock (of manor). Extended throughout to instaurum.
intinctum past part., intincta past part.: to declare, 90.

ixen', see exennium.

jento: to breakfast. iantium pres. part. 83 (for. exp., Warden's exp.).

jerc-, etc.: unmated ewe. Extended throughout to forms in -ia (MS.: 'Iercie' nom. pl., 'jerciis' abl. pl. 71 (jercie)).

jument-, etc.: mare. Extended throughout to forms in -um; never extended on the MSS.

juvenc-, etc.: heifer. Extended throughout to forms in -a, not -ula (MS.: 'iuuenccis' abl. pl. 62 (heifers)).

kalendare nom. s.: summary of manorial accounts for entire estate (cf. p. 30), 40.

knedtrow nom. s.: kneading-trough (OED kneading-trough, trough), 48.

lad acc. s.: projecting board or side-piece for cart (OED lade sb^3, EDD lade sb^1) or, possibly, thong (OED lad sb^2), 48.

ladel abl. s., lhadel abl. s.: ladle (OED ladle), 78, 85 (petty exp. in each).

ladeles abl.: boards of a water-wheel (OED ladle), 79 (costs of mill).

lana: wool. Extended throughout to sing. 'emptor' lanarum' occurs on 84 (Warden's exp.), but also 'pro lana vendenda' (oats).

lard-: meat-store or preserved meat. Extended throughout to lardarium. Never extended beyond 'lardar'' on the MSS.

lat-, etc.: lath. lattys abl. 60 (repair of buildings). Extended throughout to forms in -a, with single t unless tt on MS. (MS. 'dictas bord' et Lath'' 71 (for. exp.) implies a fem. form).

lateneyl gen.(?) pl., latheneil abl. pl., latthenayl abl., latthenayl' abl. pl.: lath-nails (Salzman, Build. in Eng., p. 310), 65 (costs of buildings), 68 (costs of granary), 83, 84 (costs of buildings in each), 85 (costs of mill).

lev-, etc.: making (of hay). Extended throughout to forms in -acio (MS.: 'post leuacionem' 116).

lex: law. See facio.

lib- noun or past part: payment or delivery; delivered. In general extended to liberacio after 'in' and whenever it means payment (in cash or kind) for work or services, and to liberatum for other deliveries. In the paragraph headings and in grand totals of cash discharge extended to liberata (neut. pl.) for hand xxi and, in paragraph headings only, for hand xvii also, but for other hands extended to liberacio (MSS.: 'Summa omnium expensarum et liberatorum' 68 (cash discharge total); 'Liber' Regi et Forinceca' 64 (for. exp.); 'Summa liberacionis' 62 (cash discharge total); etc.). For hand xxx liberacio is extended to the pl. in headings or with reference to a series of payments, but otherwise to the sing. throughout (MSS.: 'liberacione' abl. 58 (peas); 'In liberacione ij fugatorum' 82 (mixed corn); 'ad liberaciones fam'' 84 (wheat); etc.). The recipient is extended to dat. after liberatum, after liberacio facta and in consecutive entries where liberacio is understood instead of being repeated, but otherwise the recipient is extended to gen. (MSS.: 'Et liber' Iohanni Stagard'' 84 (wheat); 'In lib' facta vni garcioni' 71 (for. exp.); 'In liber' Famulorum' 57 (wheat); 'In lib' canum' 72 (mixed corn); etc.). Hand xii writes 'In liber' alteri bercar'' on 58 (mixed corn) but also 'In liberac' predictorum' in the same paragraph, and 'alteri' may be intended as gen. sing.

lig-: fixing tyres to wheels. Where followed by gen., extended to ligatura (MS.: 'In ligatur' . . . noue carr'' 60 (costs of carts)).

lingon' abl. s.: meaning unknown (no related word traced), 66 (petty exp.).

linguis abl.: metal tongues, blades, 71 (petty exp.). The word probably also occurs on 69–71 (costs of carts in each) where lingn' (pieces of wood) or lingu' are bought for axles (in these cases it may possibly mean linch-pin (cf. OED linch sb^1, MLWL linca)), and possibly also on 71, 81 (costs of carts in each) where they are bought for saddles (but cf. 'lingno' on 68 (petty exp.)).

lintheam-, etc.: linen sheet. Extended throughout to forms in -en (MSS.: 'linthia'bus' abl. 49; etc.).

lochurdles abl. pl.: special hurdles used for milking sheep (Drew, Notes; Stratton accts, p. 236), 68 (petty exp.).

locus: place. per loca: in places, 64 (petty exp.), 65 (costs of buildings), 66 (petty exp.), 67 (costs of buildings).

luteus, -a, -um: earthen. luteys abl. pl. 63 (costs of dairy).

lyard abl.: horse spotted with white or grey (OED lyard), 72 (costs of carts).

lyird nom. s.: particular tool or implement (?: no related word traced), 48.

manger acc. s.: manger (OED manger), 69 (petty exp.).

manualis: by hand. See opus.

manus: hand. In the phrase 'in man' domini', etc., extended only in italics. On the MSS. in this context it is never written in abl. pl. and only twice in acc. sing. ('capiatur in Manum domini' 91; 'capit in Manum suam' 103). No consistent usage emerges in any clerk's choice between abl. sing. and acc. pl. in the many instances where it is written thus in full on the MSS.

marescalcia: farriery, treatment of horses. marchausia abl. 70 (petty exp.).

Marger-, etc.: woman's name. Extended to forms in -ia (MS.: 'Margeria' nom. s. 111).

mariol', mareol' varying cases: (1) breeding female of sheep, 58 (purchase of sheep), 60 (sheep), 63 (sheep), where it is the equivalent of matrix, the word used on the other accounts in hand xii; (2) breeding female of geese, passim (the definition in MLWL, 'unmated goose', is inapplicable here; see, for example, 71 (geese)). Extended to forms in -iola, except for hand xii where extended only in italics; never fully extended on the MSS.

Although often specifically of rope, the word presumably bears the same meaning in 58, 60, 61, 63 (costs of ploughs in each) where virge (rods, withies) are bought 'ad traic'', etc.; cf. purchases of virge 'pro hernesio caruc'' in 1308–9 (MM 5832) or 'ad necessaria caruc'' on 77 (costs of ploughs). traicium gen. pl. 48. For hand xii extended to forms in '-ium' acc. s., '-iarum' gen. pl. or '-iis' abl. pl., and for all other hands to tractus, treated as 4th decl. (MSS.: 'trahicium' acc. 63 (costs of ploughs); 'trahiciarum' gen. pl. 61 (costs of ploughs); 'tractuum' gen. pl. 31 (petty exp.), 64, 67, 69 (costs of carts in each), 85 (equipment); etc.).

tractar' verb. infin., or noun, abl.: to pull up or pulling up (weeds), 30 (hoeing and mowing).

tracto: to milk. terict'(?) pres. ind. 64 (calves).

transgressio, etc., fem. noun: trespass. transgrescione abl. 86, 88. For hand xi extended with sc, otherwise with ss. 'de predicto transgressione' occurs on 108.

tremes abl.: spring-corn (MLWL trimenstruum), 65 (harvest exp.).

trendeles acc. pl.: vessels, tubs (OED trendle sb), 48.

trendeles acc.: lantern-wheels (OED trendle sb, trundle sb), 68 (costs of mill).

tribul-: tool or shovel. Extended throughout to tribula (MS.: 'vna tribula ferrata' abl. 68 (petty exp.)).

tripes: tripod, trivet. tripodem acc. s. 48.

trituro: to thresh. For hand xxx extended to 'triturantur' when this fits context (MS.: 'triturantur' 84 (dredge)).

trou nom. s.: trough (OED trough), 37.

truelle nom. s.: trowel (OED trowel), 48.

truncis abl. pl.: length, roll of cloth (?: no related word traced, and it may be simply trunk, chest, box, as MLWL truncus), 74 (rents of mills).

tumberell-: tumbrel, dung-cart. Extended as tumberellus or tumberellum (MS.: 'pro vno tumberell'' 71 (petty exp.)); never occurs in the texts in nom. sing.

tynys gen. pl.: tubs (OED tine sb^3), 62 (petty exp.).

ultra: beyond. See mensura.

unctio ovium: sheep salve. vncione ouium abl. 59 (petty exp.).

unde: of which. 'de vj caponibus . . . vn' iij caponibus . . . miss' super comp'' occurs on 64 (capons; similarly chicks).

ung-: to anoint. For hand xii extended to unguo, otherwise to ungo (MSS.: 'vnguend'' ger. 63 (costs of ploughs, petty exp.); 'vngend'' ger. 71 (costs of carts); 'vngere' infin. 83 (costs of fold)).

ustilmenta neut. pl.: household goods, utensils. hostiliamenta acc. pl. 108; vtencil' nom., acc. 147.

ustrina: malt-kiln. ostrinium acc. 65 (petty exp.).

vsum acc. s.: crop or year's use, 81 (issues of manor).

vt: that is (arising perhaps from 'videlicet' abbreviated), 82 (hoeing), 83 (mowing and hoeing), 84 (costs of carts, hoeing), possibly 78 (dredge), 80 (for. rec.), 84 (cash liveries), 85 (barley with dredge, peas).

valent-: value. Extended throughout to valencia (MS.: 'valenciam' acc. 110).

vang-: spade. Extended throughout to vanga (MSS. 'vanga' nom. s. 85 (equipment), abl. s. 70 (petty exp.)).

vanna abl. s.: flat basket or shovel (OED fan sb^1, van sb^1; but in this case not for winnowing, as bought for bake-house), 69 (for. exp.).

vasa acc.: barrels, tubs, 53, 107.

velut' neut. nom. s.: tanned (?: apparently synonymous with 'tann'' on 83), 83, 84 (hides in each).

vend- noun or past part.: sale or sold. In paragraph headings extended to vendicio with gen. (venditio for hand xvii) if it is thus the first noun in the heading, otherwise to venditus, -a, -um (MSS.: '[ven]ditio ord'' 64; 'Ordium venditum' 66; 'Vendicio stauri' 78; etc.). 'Frumenti vend'' occurs on 30.

venio: to come. ueniad pres. subj. 12.

vent-: winnowing. ventationis gen. 31 (dredge). Extended throughout to ventilacio. 'ventul'' abl. occurs on 78 (threshing).

ventatorium, etc.: winnowing-fan. ventilator nom., ventilator' acc. 37; ventilabr' nom. 85 (equipment), acc. 84 (petty exp.), abl. 83 (petty exp.) (cf. SMED fan sb).

vericacion' acc. s.: letter from archdeacon to bishop in ecclesiastical legal procedure, probably to notify that an excommunicate was contumacious, 85 (for. exp.).

verr-: boar. For hand vi extended to verrus, otherwise to verres (MSS.: 'verrum' acc. 57 (petty exp.); 'uerres' nom. pl. 59 (pigs); etc.).

versus: towards. See duco.

vert-: hinge. Extended throughout to vertivella (MS.: 'vertiuella' abl. s. 66 (petty exp.)).

ves-: vetch. vessibus abl. 147. For hand xii extended to forms in ss, which it uses consistently; for other hands extended to forms in sc. The usage of hands xxi, xxiii, is very inconsistent; thus forms in ss, sc both occur in 68 (vetch) and in 74 (vetch). Extended throughout to pl. (MSS.: 'vesse' nom. 72 (vetch); 'Vesce' nom. 85 (vetch with berevechicorn); etc.). 'vesse' gen. occurs on 70 (vetch) as well as 'vesse' nom.

vescosus: mixed with vetch. vescat' neut. gen. s. 82 (note after cash balance).

vestio 4th conj.: to fit (plough) with mould-board. vestiand' ger. 82, 84, 85 (costs of ploughs in each).

veterlokes abl. pl.: fetterlocks, to prevent horse from straying (OED fetterlock, veterlok), 65 (petty exp.).

vetus 3rd decl.: old. Hand xvii writes vetera fem. nom. s. 64 (petty exp.) but also 'veteres' fem. nom. pl. 64 (geese). With gen., 'trium annorum uet'': three years old, 59 (issues of manor). In abl. sing. extended throughout to veteri (MSS.: 77 (dredge), 84 (issues of manor), etc.).

vicem: time, occasion. per vices: on various occasions, 57 (costs of carts), 69 (reeve's exp.), 70 (for. exp., reeve's exp.), 71 (reeve's exp.), 72 (cheese, milk), 76 (rents of mill), 77 (costs of ploughs), 79 (milk), 80 (costs of ploughs), 81 (shoeing horses, petty exp.), 123, 134.

videlicet: that is. vedelicet 29.

vill-: village. Extended to villa where it apparently means the place, to villata where it means the inhabitants (MSS.: 'villa' abl. 63 (sale of stock); 'totam villat'' acc. 97; etc.). On 98 'Tota villata' is followed by a pl. verb, 'concelauerunt'.

vincula Sancti Petri: Lammas. vincelam Sancti Petri acc. 2.

virga: stick. Extended to pl. unless context unambiguously demands sing. (MS.: 'virgis' abl. 75 (costs of ploughs)).

virgat' abl. pl.: roods, quarter-acres, 51.

viridis, -e: green. virio neut. abl. s. 99.

viscer-, etc.: offal. Extended throughout to neut. pl. forms in -a; never extended on the MSS. viscera porc' extended to viscera porcorum, or to viscera porci if clearly only one pig's offal involved; never extended on the MSS.

vither' masc. abl. pl.: ploughshare (?: cf. Custumals of the Sussex manors of the archbishop of Canterbury, ed. B. C. Redwood and A. E. Wilson (Sussex Record Soc., lvii; 1958), p. 4), 58 (costs of ploughs).

vivarium: fish-pond. Extended throughout to sing.; never extended on the MSS.

voco: to call. vocat ad recordum pres. indic.: to call to witness, 114.

vomer masc.: ploughshare. 'vomer' acc. s., i.e. neut., occurs on 48, and 'j noue vomeris' gen. s., i.e. fem., on 78 (costs of ploughs).

war-: warrant or warranty. Extended throughout to warantia, with single r unless rr on the MS.

warect- noun or adj.: fallow land or fallow. Extended to warecta if clearly a noun, to warectatus, -a, -um if an adj. (MSS.: 'Warecta' abl. 130; 'Warectatis' abl. pl. 108).

watille abl.: wattle (OED wattle sb^1), 63 (costs of buildings).

wys acc. s.: screw of a press (OED vice sb^2), 48.
yryssch' abl.: Irish, a type of cloth (no related usage traced), 53.

B. GRAMMAR AND SYNTAX

NOUNS

Gender. For correct use of fem. for names of trees see fagus, fraxinus. 'eundem' is used to refer to the English cogwel on 73 (costs of mill).
For errors of gender see haia, petra, sepes, transgressio and, possibly, corda; see also boviculus for use of masc. noun referring to female stock. Hand xxi writes 'que dati fuerunt' on 67, 68 (oats in each) and hand xxiii twice writes 'quilibet' of mulieres, 77 (hoeing and mowing); 'Matilde . . . defuncti' occurs on 94, 'pro dampna facto' on 99, 'inparcata' referring to auce on 108.

Number. Where there is only a single item of stock in a paragraph on an account roll the heading is extended in the sing. (MS.: 'Taurus' 76). 'Apri', however, occurs in such a case on 64, 'Hogastri' on 67, 'Sues' on 71 and 'Iercie' on 72. Where an animal is added 'cum . . .' or 'de . . .' the noun is extended throughout in the pl.

Case. For the cheese paragraphs in hand xii the items accounted for in account-roll entries are extended in acc. (MS.: 'quolibet die vnum cas'' 65 (cheese); etc.), but otherwise in nom. throughout (MSS.: 'baco de stauro' 67 (visitors' exp.); 'j capo' 70 (visitors' exp.); 'j cecus' 84 (carthorses); etc.). 'per noctem j garbam' occurs on 68 (oats).
Gen. used for age occurs in 'dimidii anni' 58 (sale of stock); see also vetus.
Noun following copulative verb extended throughout to same case as the subject (MS.: 'vnus factus est equs' 62 (foals)). 'de x Hogerellis rem' super comp' angni' occurs on 67 (hogerelli).
Errors of case mostly arise from a tendency to lapse into the nominative, e.g. 'cuidam mercatori de lond' iam defunctus' 61 (gifts), 'In j pertica et ij pedes noui muri' 65 (petty exp.).

ADJECTIVES

Declension. 3rd decl. adjectives, including present participles, extended in abl. sing. to -e or -i following the usage of Classical Latin (MSS.: 'precedenti' 97; 'in separali solo' 107; etc.). More often, however, the MSS. use -e in all circumstances for abl. sing. of present participles ('faciente' 35 (petty exp.); 'currente' 107; etc.). 'separali' abl. s., though used as a noun, occurs on 127.
For hands xvii, xxiii, comparative adjectives extended to -i in abl. singular, otherwise to -e (MSS.: 'maiori' 64 (sale of dairy produce), 69 (cheese); 'minore' 80 (sale of dairy produce); etc.). 'priori' occurs on 77 (note after cash balance: hand xxv), 'maiori' on 80 (cheese), 'meliori' on 97.

Errors in declension include 'de minora forma' 64 (cheese), 'in bonu statu' 86.

Gender. Adjectives qualifying two or more nouns of differing gender have been extended following the usage of Classical Latin (MSS.: 'boum et vacc' infirmor'' 72 (eggs); 'Ricardus et Matilda seisiti sunt' 117). Hand xxiii writes both 'quorum' and 'quarum' in referring to cocks and hens together, 71 (hens).

Numerals. For hands xxiii, xxvi, nouns following a numeral ending in the digit 1 (21, 31, etc.) are extended to the sing. (MSS.: 'xxj noctem' 69 (oats); 'Cj oue' 79 (sheep); 'per xxj diem integros' 81 (petty exp.); 'per lj septimanam' 78 (heading); etc.); there is no clear case where either hand uses a pl. in these circumstances, though 'ou' matric'' 70 (ewes), 'multon'' 72, 74 (wethers in each), 'capon'' 79 (capons), imply a pl. form and 'operus' on 42 points to momentary hesitation or absent-mindedness. 'xxj acram' also occurs on 12.

In extending nouns following numerals the usage of Classical Latin has been followed in treating all numerals as adjectives except milia, pl., which is declined and followed by gen. (MSS.: 'ij^{M} Scingulorum' 65 (costs of buildings); 'In C paruis clau'' 70 (costs of carts)). In some cases on the MSS. other numerals are treated as nouns, thus 'cum dimidio cento clauorum' 35 (costs of carts), 'In CCC et di. latarum' 68 (costs of buildings). Hand xxi writes 'festum vndecim Milia virg'' on 68 (sale of dairy produce, cheese); hand xxiii writes 'xxvj de quateronbord', 'iiij^{MI} de Lath'' 71 (for. exp.). After duodena, etc., the noun is extended throughout to gen.: never extended on the MSS.

ADVERBS

Used as adjectives. Hand xii writes 'de ann' retro et present'', 'die ant'' on 59.

Used as conjunctions, prepositions. See minus, plus.

VERBS

Present participles. See Adjectives: declension.

Past participles. The past part. opening an entry (or following 'computat') on an account is extended thoughout to an invariable neut. sing. in -um (MSS.: 'Datum' 67 (Warden's exp.); 'mixtum' 84 (dredge); etc.). 'datis' occurs on 61 (petty exp.), 'mutata' on 81 (cider).

Gerund, gerundive. Where a gerund or gerundive follows a noun the verb is extended to a gerundive form, taking the same case and number as the noun, but in all other cases the verb is extended to a quasi-gerund in a neut. form and a following noun is extended to the acc. (MSS.: 'ad vnguend' colla boum' 63 (costs of carts); 'ad faciendum legem suam' 111; 'In pisse Cariand'' 31 (petty exp.); etc.). 'fenum leuando et Moylonem faciend'' occurs on 89, and on 145 'reparandum' has been changed to 'reparandas' in 'ad reparandum dictas domus'.

Abl. gerund occurs on the MSS. in phrases as 'in expensis David versus fareley et redeundo' 61 (visitors' exp.), 'eundo et redeund'' 74 (for. exp.); see also do.

Gerundive used for part. probably occurs in 'dum erat operand'' 63 (mixed corn), and part. used for gerundive in 'In Tunica Magistri Petri querent'' 57 (petty exp.).

Tense. Some inconsistencies of tense occur on the accounts, such as 'seminantur' on 70 (wheat), 'liberabantur' on 79 (note after cash balance), where perf. would be expected, or 'preparabunt' on 85 (costs of mill) for pres. subj. 'putauit venisse' occurs on 67 (wheat) to mean 'he thought he would come'. In the court rolls there is much inconsistency in the use of pres. and perf. in describing proceedings in court (though see p. 83, n. 63). 'pon it' and 'vadiauit' both occur on 90, 'habet' and 'habuit' on 101, 'vadiauit' and 'queritur' on 105, etc. Except for pono (q.v.) verbs on the court rolls have been extended only in italics.

1. The Index covers references to persons and places throughout the book, but includes subject entries only for the Introduction.
2. Not included are references to (i) kings in dates by regnal year, (ii) Merton College and its Warden in the headings of documents, and (iii) Cuxham, except as a surname (but minor names, etc., within Cuxham are included).
3. Variant forms of surnames and place-names found in the text are normally all listed (with cross-references), omitting, however, forms that differ only because a mark of suspension has either been added or put in place of a final e.
4. References that apparently relate to a single person under different names have been brought together (with cross-references), but it must be emphasised that complete certainty of identification is often not possible. The use of surnames at Cuxham and their variability is discussed in Harvey, Med. Oxf. vil., pp. 126–8.
5. Common male christian names have been abbreviated; other abbreviations used are:
