The Oxfordshire Record Society, founded in 1919, exists for the publication of documents relating to the history of the county of Oxford (including that part formerly in Berkshire). Nearly sixty volumes have been published, covering a wide range of subject matter and virtually every period from the tenth century to the twentieth.

Publication of the extraordinary wealth of documentary material which survives for Oxfordshire can only be achieved through members' subscriptions. In return, on payment of the first subscription, new members may choose a free copy of any of the Society's volumes still in print, and thereafter they will receive new volumes as they are produced. Subscribers are entitled to attend the Annual General Meeting each Summer, usually held in one of the county's historic houses or in a college of the University of Oxford.

Applications for membership (currently £9 per annum) should be sent to the Hon. Secretary, c/o Bodleian Library, Oxford OX1 3BG.

FOREWORD

An edition of the Oxfordshire muster returns of 1539 and 1542 was suggested to the Society by Mr. Beauchamp in December, 1983. It was initially anticipated that the musters would form part of a composite volume of records related in subject matter or chronologically. Such a project appearing unlikely to see the light of day within the foreseeable future, it has been decided, at the suggestion of Mr. Jeremy Gibson, to include the muster returns of 1569 and to publish all the returns by themselves.

I am grateful to Mr. Beauchamp for great patience in the face of various problems which have delayed the appearance of this edition. Thanks are due also to Mr. Gibson, who laboured for many hours to produce camera-ready copy for the printer.

The Society wishes to thank the British Academy for its grant towards the costs of research and the Greening Lamborn Trust for its generous grant towards the publication costs of this volume. The Society is further indebted to Mr. Beauchamp for personally meeting much of the cost of the colour frontispiece, and to Mr Christopher Horton for permitting the reproduction, without charge, of his photograph of the Williams tomb in St. Mary's church, Thame.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

During the twenty years I lived in Oxford as a young man I developed a strong genealogical interest in the Burford area, whence part of my family originated. In later years this study took me regularly to the Oxfordshire Record Office. The suggestion that the Oxfordshire Record Society might wish to find an editor for King Henry VIII's musters was first made to me by Miss Shirley Barnes in late 1982, when she was the County Archivist. Having served in two branches of the armed services, latterly with the Honourable Artillery Company in London, whose regiment of archers and pikemen goes back to its formation by Henry VIII, I had studied the Oxfordshire musters in the Public Record Office with special attention and so her suggestion was one of particular interest.

Since commencing the work at the P.R.O., unstinting 'second and even third opinions' in transcribing the handwriting were obtained from Dr. D. Crook, Mr. N. E. Evans, Dr. E. J. Higgs and Mr. A. Eames. I am also indebted to Mr. C. L. Scott for his criticism and advice, especially concerning arms and armour, and to Mr. R. Mann, who gave me information on those mustered in Kingham. Mr. Jeremy Gibson first suggested the inclusion of the 1569 muster roll, arranged for photocopies to be made available to Mrs Gwyn de Jong, in Holland, who transcribed these to computer disc, and subsequently he and I spent agreeable time at the P.R.O. (comfortably accommodated by courtesy of Mrs. Susan Lurnas) checking this transcription with the original. I am additionally most grateful to him for his processing of computer discs and for the huge task of making an index out of some 3,600 names. Elsewhere, of the many people who have given advice and help, some on several occasions, I must particularly thank Mr. Christopher Day, the Society's General Editor, and Dr. D.M. Barratt, Mr. Jim Bolton, Dr. Janet Cooper, Mr. Alan Dell, Mr. Gibson, Mr. C. G. Lewin, Mrs. R. Moody, Dr. Richard Smith, and Mr. Steven Tomlinson.

I am especially grateful for the research grant received from the British Academy, which greatly helped to defray the expenses of travel and production, and to the assistance of Mr. Day and Miss B. F. Harvey, the Society's Chairman, in supporting my application.

The length of the task has certainly been increased by duty travel for extended periods in the Far East and Africa over the last thirteen years, but its fascination has never diminished.

Finally, I would like to thank Mrs. Lucy Jong-Chapman and Miss Alene Wilton for the personal interest taken in word processing the manuscript.

INTRODUCTION

1. King Henry VIII's musters: the background

In 1538 Pope Paul IV had issued a Bull excommunicating Henry VIII and declared him deposed for his heretical opinions. Simultaneously the Pope was attempting to induce the Roman Catholic heads of Europe, the Emperor Charles V and King Francis I of France, to execute the deposition. King Henry and his Privy Council, receiving intelligence of this, became seriously alarmed and ordered a muster or assembly, listing, and count of the entire able-bodied strength (between the ages of 16 and 60) of the southern English counties, together with details of their arms, armour and in many cases their potential financial contribution to his cause. Many of the muster books or rolls have survived and they list men actually called to arms or those who would be liable for such a call. While some clearly cover a sizeable proportion of the available male population, others list a smaller number that happened to have been chosen or to have enrolled voluntarily.¹ Undoubtedly a proportion of men listed were able to arrange a proxy if the need arose. But it was understood that their mustered liability would continue until the end of the reign.

The legal basis for the musters has been extensively discussed by Goring² and others and was largely formulated in the Statute of Winchester of 1285, which remained the main structure for military organisation until the reign of Philip and Mary.³ In the fourteenth century Edward II interpreted the statute to require every parish to keep ready for use a certain amount of armour and a man or men properly trained in its use. Moreover the common law of the land bound every Englishman to hold himself in readiness at all times to serve in its defence. Henry VIII also invoked local manorial as well as feudal law to extend fully the reach of his musters⁴ (see Appendix II).

2. The Oxfordshire rolls

All the rolls are in a relatively good state of preservation but there are pages in each where damp or dirt has obscured them or where the ink has faded. The handwriting for each hundred appears to be different except for the composite roll for Chadlington and Bampton where even here there is some inconsistency.

Bullingdon hundred

According to page one of the muster book (which has become detached, filed and indexed separately in the P.R.O.⁵ and in the *Letters and Papers of Henry VIII*⁶) the roll was taken on 25 April 1539. April was considered to be the outset of the campaigning season and the date was in fact a little later than the neighbouring North Wiltshire musters (10 April) with which there is some similarity in format. Nevertheless, it was taken well before harvest time, for in later years the Oxfordshire commissioners were to protest against mustering in the summer, which affected the labour force.⁷ The roll itself appears in a book⁸ bound with some Suffolk musters. It provides by far the longest list of names of all the five hundreds, although a few of the total of 615 may include duplications by the scribe, who had also included a special list of 'men omitted' for Headington. It is thought that these were men excluded because of some financial arrangement or as a result of absence (see also Appendix III).

Ploughley hundred

Discovered among the Letters and Papers of Henry VIII⁹ the roll itself¹⁰ proved to have far more names (forty-one including the three Commissioners) than the summary in the reference suggested. Again the muster was for 1539 but no month is given, so we may guess that, with Bullingdon and North Wiltshire, it was taken in April. The lists are bound with a number of muster rolls for other counties, on paper superimposed with silk gauze and repaired with parchment.

Wootton hundred

Again, the date of the roll is not given in the document but it seems reasonable to assume that since the document¹¹ appears with neighbouring muster material for 1542 it was probably drafted at the same time, in September. In later years Oxfordshire was to lament the absence of men to repair bridges throughout the county in early autumn, as a reason for the county being 'almost undone' when faced with the requirement for a muster.¹² There are 249 names altogether. The roll appears in the State Papers series,¹³ written on paper superimposed with silk gauze and meticulously repaired with parchment by the Public Record Office.

Bampton and Chadlington hundreds

A suggested month of compilation of September 1542¹⁴ is supported by evidence of the musters taken in the shires of Hereford and Gloucester of 14 September and 1 October respectively. The document¹⁵ is a parchment roll comprising nine rotulets stitched together with the muster for Chadlington appearing on rott. 1-5 and that for Bampton on rott. 6-9. A joint certificate for both hundreds appears on rot. 1 giving the regnal year (34) without month or date. There are 348 names for Bampton and 246 (including the three Commissioners) for Chadlington. The first letters for paragraphs and towns have, in many cases, been strikingly illuminated and embellished with drawings of roses, flowers, profiles of faces, dogs, anchors etc. Similar occasional illuminations in the contemporary will registers held at Oxfordshire Archives suggest that the respective scribes might well have learnt their craft under the same roof.

Archers, billmen, and harness: the total county force relative to Henry's battle plan

It is not without interest to compare in Table I the figures for the total Oxfordshire force mustered for the county in 1524 with those shown in Henry's campaign plan for 1544, which necessarily must have included all those in Table II. The harness (armour) total had somewhat improved over twenty years but it must have been obvious to Henry and his advisors, seeking to mobilise a fully equipped force from the southern counties, that Oxfordshire was unable to marshal more than one man in five with harness.

The archer proportion is also of interest. Men enrolled as archers were not supposed to change their specialisation; but evidence from later musters suggests this was impossible to prevent.

Table I

Two years totals compared

Year	Archers	Billmen	Total for Oxon	Harness
1524 ¹⁶	656	1,470	2,126	81
1544 ¹⁷	416	1,580	1,996	438

It will be seen that the total for Oxfordshire for the year 1544 is higher than the consolidated total figure for the muster rolls enumerated in Table II.

Table II

Total	Unclear	235	303	411	277
Total Names	615	41	246	348	249

Total names for all five hundreds: 1,499

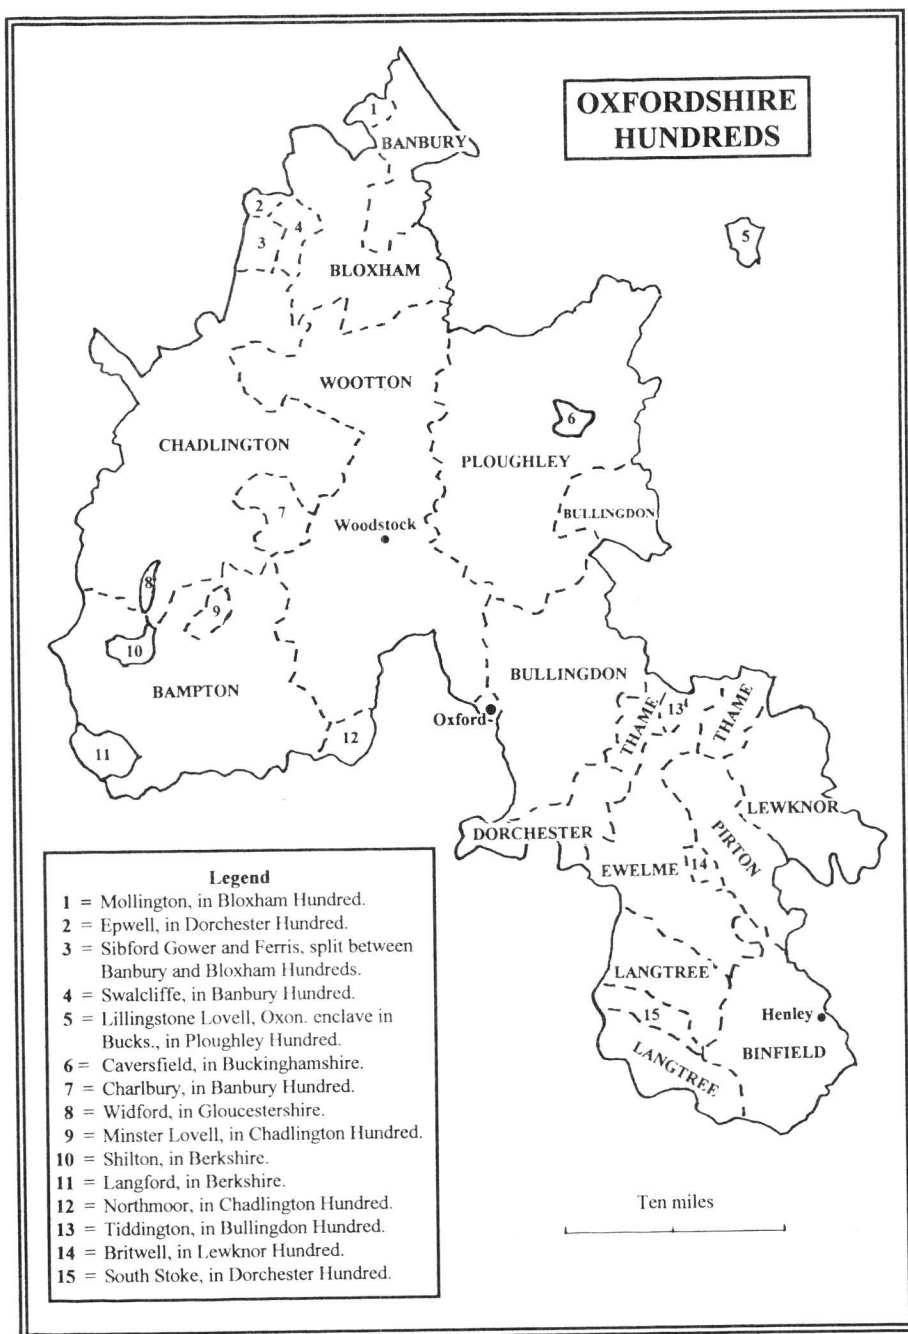

All figures are approximate since the classification of many individuals is imprecise.¹⁸

The disparity between the Oxfordshire total in Table I and the consolidated total of names for Table II is 497 persons. But this figure is more than made up by the contribution of over six hundred men from Oxford notables and Oxford town listed in Appendices II and III. Even so, in terms of the muster rolls in the above table, the total of 1,499 represents some four per cent of the Duke of Suffolk's section of Henry's battle plan and less than two per cent of the total force planned for France.

17. P.R.O., SP1/184 f. 222.

18. There were, no doubt, a limited number of conscripts with capability in both weapons. For instance, Richard Dawby was denoted billman at Burford but taxed as bowyer in 1550 (P.R.O. E179/162/279).

4. The choice of hundreds, and the compilation of the rolls

On the above evidence, only five out of fourteen Oxfordshire hundreds appear to have been mustered between 1539 and 1542 and no information as to the reason for this has come to light. However it seems logical that this was a matter of convenience, since current Subsidy Returns together with the Commissioners of Array were probably readily accessible to some members of the Privy Council at Woodstock Palace. Woodstock Palace, where Councillors often met Henry, was itself in Wootton hundred, and the other four hundreds which were mustered were all adjacent to Wootton.

Compilation

As Dasent points out,¹⁹ there is no record of the proceedings of the Privy Council for over a century, between the years 1435 and 1540. Such records might well have included basic practical instructions on how the musters were to be taken. Cornwall,²⁰ who has made a wide study of county musters, finds that there is much that is unclear as to how officials were briefed in taking them and while finding a limited set of instructions for Essex, warns of pitfalls in assuming any detailed country-wide regimen. In Oxfordshire no contemporary archive material survives detailing instructions given or methods used, but there seems little doubt that the roll for Bullingdon, taken some three years earlier than the others, was collected under different instructions to those which followed.

We may assume that the hundred bailiff and perhaps his two mounted constables as well as the local constables and the clergy were the officials mainly concerned with determining selection. The co-operation and example of the lord of each manor would certainly have been sought at the outset, even though the King might have asked him to find his own force (see Appendix I). It is also possible that special local assemblies might have been called, although in the case of Bullingdon the topographical progression of place-names suggests that the hundred could have been mustered in two itineraries. The same is broadly true for Wootton hundred, save for a considerable detour to take in Cassington and Worton. In the case of Bullingdon and, possibly, Wootton hundreds it seems that the inhabitants of each place were listed house by house, wherever the muster taker required 'every of these to keep in their houses' various weapons. Henry had issued a proclamation in 1513 whereby every mustered man, including their officers, had to swear that the weapons they produced were their own.²¹ It seems logical that this was because mustered men had been found to connive with neighbours or even those in neighbouring hundreds, so as to show adequate equipment. If the muster had been taken en masse, an individual's weapons, armour or personal estate, as a contribution to the army, would not have been so surely verified. The later rolls for the other hundreds are more random, so that if each place was enrolled in the course of an itinerary, very extensive backtracking and deviation would have been involved. It is likely that the later rolls were an edited consolidation of notes by several tally clerks, and that therefore no geographical order should be expected.

No explanation has been found for the omission of Kidlington from the Wootton rolls.

5. Recruitment and selection

Gaol delivery

Oxford gaol may have been used as a transit camp for the muster force. Sir John Brome used it as a source of levies in 1545, when he conscripted men in the gaol delivery detachment. At a case heard in the court of Star Chamber at Weston in 1545²² Sir John testified that at the request of his neighbour Edward Streatley he had interceded with another neighbour, Sir Edward Montague, chief justice of the county, to release George Streatley, 'gent. of Wheatfield' (Bullingdon hundred), put in Oxford gaol for felony. The conditions of his release on bail to two further neighbours were that they would be discharged from their sureties if he made an appearance before the King's Bench. Sir John, on reviewing the gaol delivery, found George Streatley and many others 'personable and in appearance more able to serve the king's highness truly to the best of their powers' in his military service. Consequently, Streatley was delivered out of prison by order of the justices of gaol delivery and sent to Portsmouth 'whence he had departed and was in the king's wars beyond the seas', it being apparent that his appearance before the King's Bench had been circumvented.

The University

The bishop of Ely raised the important question whether the University came under the charge of the commissioners for the musters for whom he was responsible. No doubt there were those, especially among the town's citizens, ready to point out that the university offered a substantial pool of able-bodied young men. But Sir Thomas Wriothesley, Lord Chancellor, replied that he 'marvels that anyone should interrupt privileges which the king has allowed, and advises him and the Commissioners to leave them in quiet.'²³

Nevertheless, we know that at least one prelate close to the throne sought assistance from the University before the King's departure for France in 1544. Thomas Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, stated on April 20 that he had 'written lately to the warden of All Souls College, desiring him to furnish the king with one demi-lance and two light geldings against his grace's going this summer into France, to which he has had no answer. The king's pleasure is that he shall with all diligence send up the demi-lance and geldings to London by May 4 or 5 if he can by any possible means provide them, or at least one demi-lance furnished with an able man and all things necessary.'²⁴

It is clear that additional military resources were being sought from Oxfordshire in addition to those which appear on the muster rolls.

Choice of men

Actual choice of individuals was ultimately the responsibility of the Commissioners of Array. These with their deputies and county and parish officials drew up the muster certificates which included the lists of men. The men themselves were classified as to suitability. There is no clear definition of the classification 'Able Men': the classification did not always appear, and indeed the presentation of the rolls and their terminology vary from hundred to hundred. Beyond doubt, those mustered were required to be between the ages of sixteen and sixty²⁵ and once mustered they would remain answerable as long as they were not invalidated by old age, infirmity or absence. There is nothing to suggest that any form of age or medical screening took place at enrolment, in fact there was no legal requirement for parishes to keep baptism records until 1538.

The men in the Bullington rolls were divided for certain places by the unexplained but possibly suggestive heading 'the second sort'. It seems probable that they were deemed untrained or unfit but were nevertheless required to be enrolled.

In some hundreds weaponry skills are marginally denoted by the letters 'A' or 'Ar' for archer and 'B' or 'b' for billman, but many names are unclassified.

Desirable attributes

A few contemporary allusions throw further light. Those mustered were required to be 'picked men'.²⁶ 'Able and tall' men were preferred, and of these the ablest and tallest were chosen as archers and the rest as billmen,²⁷ although their assessed capacity with either weapon would normally have been the overriding criterion. Measurement of the human remains found near the archery equipment by workers examining the Mary Rose, which sank in 1545, have been estimated to be those of a man six feet in height.²⁸ As Hardy says 'few today could pull great longbows even once',²⁹ yet the archers of those days must have been powerful enough to shoot them repeatedly in battle. This is well articulated in some Hertfordshire musters where the authorities would only accept as archers 'such as are both lusty in body, able to abide the weather and can shoot a strong shoot, for hitherto we have allowed many simple and weak archers'.³⁰ At all events it seems likely that, country-wide, those designated as archers would already have had at least minimal longbow training following the Statute of 1512³¹ requiring all men to practise with the weapon on holy days.

At a later date, 1548, single men were preferred as it was thought that married men made poor 'levies'. Emphasis where possible was on the unemployed but occasionally, as will be seen, smallholders and even active farmers were taken. If contemporary opinion was heeded, one occupation should have been ignored, 'for that do we reckon that shepherds be but ill archers'.³² But the selectors may have taken a different view of others involved in such farming, for among fourteen mustered men charged under the special poll tax on sheep flocks, six were nominated as archers.³³

From time to time prejudice undoubtedly influenced choice. In the words of a veteran soldier, Barnaby Riche, writing in Elizabeth I's reign, 'our manner of appointing soldiers, is yet more confused than the rest: they be appointed in the country as it pleaseth the constable: for if there be any within his circuit, that he is in displeasure withall, he thinks it some part of revenge, if he sets him forth to be a soldier, but if master constable be in love and charity with his neighbours, then some odd fellow must be picked out that doeth least good in the parish, it is no matter for his conditions, they think he cannot be too ill to make a soldier of.³⁴

Valuations

A man's financial standing was highly relevant and was inscribed in certain county musters because of the arms and armour he owned or could provide and because he might be deemed able to send extra men. Only Bullingdon hundred, however, includes such valuations, and even then for a relatively low proportion of the men listed. No explanation has been found for this lacuna which, incidentally, similarly devalues the neighbouring North Wiltshire muster rolls for 1538/9.³⁵ Poverty appears to have been all pervading and seems the most likely reason. For the remaining four muster lists the lay subsidy assessments of 1543 for the relevant hundreds have been scrutinised, and where a likely mustered man's name occurs the valuation given has been added in square brackets against his name in the reproduced muster roll (see below). It should be borne in mind, however, that subsidy assessments of the period could, particularly in the case of towns, omit as much as half of the population who were too poor or too elusive to be recorded.³⁶

The Bullingdon muster valuation

The values of required contributions in men and armour were tallied in certain cases only and are given in pounds, shillings, pence, and marks (13s. 4d.). An individual was assessed on his goods or lands, whichever produced the greatest value. But analysis of the rates, assessed in terms of the precise variations in men and arms stipulated, show some inconsistencies. Consequently it is presumed each individual or group was viewed not only for immediate worth but also on other unspecified merits and demerits. Also, nothing is said about any existing stock of arms or armour, required under previous musters or prevailing laws such as those made in the third and sixth year of Henry's reign (see references below). Even so, two groups seem to differ from the rest by having a standard valuation:-

- (i) Those classified as 'the second sort' without valuations, amounting to approximately half the names, were each required to keep in their home 'a bill, bow and arrows, sword and [or?] dagger'. A minimum of one of the items was possibly acceptable at time of call-up.
- (ii) Those assessed individually at 20s. were required to produce a sword and dagger.

As will be observed, assessments varied from 20s. to 100 marks, and particularly in the early folios of the muster book the impression was received that the definitions of the requirement categories were being adjusted to meet widespread poverty. Where an individual or a group was designated to provide fighting men or arms we are led to assume that they were to be presented at the next muster assembly.

The tax would be levied on a person's wealth, either in goods or real estate (but never on both).⁴² It has only been possible positively to relate 25 per cent of assessments to the names mustered. It should also be borne in mind that values in 1543 may not have been the same on the date the muster was taken.

Table III

Possible occupations deduced from estate valuation⁴³

Estate	Status or occupation
£100 and upwards	Knights and other leading gentry, merchants in overseas trade.
£40-99	Gentry, higher yeomen, provincial merchants.
£20-39	Minor gentry, yeomen, lesser merchants.
£3-19	Larger peasant farmers, highly skilled craftsmen.
£2	Smallholders, village craftsmen, senior servants.
£1 and under	Artificers, labourers, and servants.

It will be seen in the main body of the muster rolls that most of the estates, where mentioned, are very low in value and that for the majority no indication is available as to their status or occupation. It has been possible to supply information on the occupations of some of those mustered on the basis of wills and other sources. The information is presented in tabular form in Table IV.

44. It has been assumed that the occupation mentioned in an individual's will had been the same at the date of muster. In some cases it has been impossible to determine if the testator was the mustered man or a son of the same name: in such instances it has, with rather more licence, been assumed that father and son followed the same occupation.

There remains ample scope for study of a number of other mustered names for whom wills appear to have been made in neighbouring parishes. Certainly the above provides no reason to dispute that the reserved occupations, immune from the muster, were servants of the Crown, clergymen, lawyers, university academics and students. Table IV seems also to substantiate that the husbandman (including the less often designated 'cottager') bore the brunt of the muster in rural areas. The husbandman was most often a copy- or leaseholder, farming up to thirty acres of land but rarely owning any. At death he seldom left much more than £15 in personal estate. Yeomen sometimes ran several farms, rented additional pastures and owned up to ten times more livestock than did husbandmen.⁴⁵

Later in the century William Harrison grouped husbandmen together as: poor men who were day-labourers, copyholders, certain types of retailers, and often artificers that were 'never so excellent in their trades as at this present.'⁴⁶ He also described the yeoman of the period as 'a settled or staid man', living well and working as a farmer or a grazier. 'These were they that in times past made France afraid...the Kings of England in fighting battles were wont to remain among them (who were their footmen)...the princes thereby showing where their chief strength did consist.'⁴⁷ A gentleman was one who could 'live idly and without manual labour' yet 'being called to the wars, whatsoever it costs him, he will both array and arm himself accordingly and show the more manly courage and all the tokens of the person which he represents.' Esquires were described as those bearing [coats of] arms and instructed in martial knowledge.⁴⁸ The Bullingdon muster roll lists no fewer than six local constables who were conscripted.

Families and females

Lady Englefield is the most important of several females appearing in the rolls. Moreover, her name also appears at the head of a list of eight Oxfordshire notables contributing 200 men to a force to help defend the Low Countries against the French in 1543.⁴⁹ The total party of several thousand footmen and horsemen was to return from Flanders after 112 days if the enemy retired or if their commander, no less than the former foe Charles V mentioned earlier, did not give chase, but were to stay longer if he paid them 'convenient' wages.⁵⁰ Oxfordshire's contribution in footmen is listed as follows:-

Lady Englefelde	10	Sir William Barentyne	20
Sir Symon Harcourte	30	Sir John Williams	30
Sir Walter Stoner	30	Anthony Cope	30
Sir John Browne [Brome?]	20	Leonard Chamberlain	30

No further specific mention of this force is made although it seems possible that they may have been part of an impressive English contingent that helped outface the French at Landrecies (Nord).

Women figured far more prominently in the Oxfordshire musters than those for neighbouring Wiltshire (which in a list of some 2,200 persons included only one). Amongst others appeared Mistress Lydiard of Dornford, Annes Bygg of Horton, Elizabeth Cambye of Stanton Harcourt and Mistress Eleanor Ashfield of Heythrop. No fewer than six members of the Pokins family were mustered, including yet another female, Eleanor, on the roll for Denton. Even more remarkable were the five Swintons from one township, Piddington, and eight members of the Prince family of Nuneham Courtenay. It is tempting to assume that an element of family solidarity manifests itself in the rolls, but their listing was almost certainly involuntary. Thomas Reynton, a north countryman writing from Oxford to his friends at Durham in later years, stated that most of the King's levies were boys and that the Oxfordshire people were so weary of being summoned to musters which were then countermanded that they would rather the King hung them up at their own doors than go again.⁵¹ Isolated observation or not, it is a further enunciation of the probability that once a person's name was on the roll, he was at the behest of all future summonses as long as he was fit and remained age-qualified.

One man who probably escaped conscription by being born too late was Archer Simpson of Hanborough. Was it a coincidence, or was he a descendant of Richard Simpson, mustered as an archer for Hanborough?⁵²

6. The call-up

Like some of his predecessors, Henry VIII needed to fight campaigns simultaneously on two fronts. This was certainly the case in the 1530s and 1540s with attacks both from Scotland and along the Channel coast. With men mustered in some thirty counties, logistical considerations were of paramount importance and it appears that no men were mustered from counties north of Lincolnshire to fight in France. The southern counties themselves were divided into three sections in Henry's campaign plan with Oxfordshire, Worcestershire and Berkshire falling in his south eastern sector covering London, Dover, Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. An actual call to arms such as to Portsmouth was made by the firing of a chain of pitch and wood beacons atop prominent hills. The Oxfordshire musters were actually called up in this way in 1545, with flaming beacons spreading the Privy Council's command through Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Berkshire to Oxfordshire (see Appendix IV).

7. Oxfordshire's rôle in the campaigns

Such information as is available on the disposal of the Oxfordshire levies is incomplete and the clues fragmentary.

Portsmouth

Close examination of the records for 1539 suggests that no Oxfordshire men were actually engaged that year, largely due to the King's success in disconcerting the Pope's strategy of inducing Charles V and Francis I to depose him. By contrast, in July 1545 the situation was much more critical, for French ships had sailed into the Solent and had actually disembarked a raiding party, said to be of two thousand men, on the Isle of Wight. Consequently, on 22 July the Privy Council ordered 'the sheriffs and gentlemen appointed to lead the men of Oxfordshire, Berkshire and Surrey to bring the power of those shires to Portsmouth and have victuals sent after them.⁵³

The minutes of the Privy Council meeting at Portsmouth for 25 July suggest a degree of confusion for they required a letter to be sent to 'certain gentlemen of Worcestershire to return the bands of men of that country, which upon an error were coming forward.'⁵⁴ Thus on 31 July 'upon a second firing of the beacons of Oxfordshire, the Worcestershire subjects had got as far as Wantage and Newbury before receiving letters to retire.' Sergeant Knuttisforde of Malvern reported that 'both Oxfordshire and Berkshire had retired back so he concluded there was no present danger.'⁵⁵

In fact no trace of any Oxfordshire men is available from the archives of the Portsmouth area although locally it was thought (without any apparent evidence) that they were actually ordered to the Isle of Wight.⁵⁶ Henry had recently built fortresses not only on the island at East and West Cowes but also at Southsea, Calshot and Hurst on the mainland. A contemporary manuscript dealing with some of the costs of the local defence arrangements refers only to 'the captains and petty captains with their bands serving as well at the said town of Portsmouth and in the Isle of Wight, also in sundry camps there';⁵⁷ but which counties they came from was unstated.

Loss of equipment

The situation over the Oxfordshire men's harness, mentioned much earlier, becomes aggravated in a somewhat obscure Privy Council minute of 4 December 1545. One James Bulstred was ordered to obtain written evidence from the 'gentlemen of the six Oxfordshire hundreds whence those 180 soldiers came' so that Mr. Vaughan, the King's financial agent at the Channel ports, could undertake to see that the harness and weapons which they had brought with them should be made available in good order. It stated that these men had been first appointed to remain under Mr Vaughan's charge at Portsmouth' and were dismissed by him. The Council undertook to arrange any restitution found necessary.⁵⁸ Dasent's reading of this minute also suggests they were stationed there, where his marginal note states 'A dispute as to the levies from Oxfordshire serving at Portsmouth.'⁵⁹

Boulogne

Despite the fact that the Duke of Suffolk's section of Henry's army called for 32,000 men, including 1,580 men from Oxfordshire, and although seven counties were later specified as sending men to Boulogne, Oxfordshire was not included in this later list.⁶⁰ Indeed there is no reference to Oxfordshire men in the reports of the Boulogne campaign save that Sir Thomas Bridges spent some three months making a survey there in 1546.⁶¹ We learn, however, from an eyewitness account that 'all the men in harness who were guarding the English coast were sent over to Calais after the departure of the raiding French fleet.⁶² This raises the possibility that the Oxfordshire contingent was withheld because it lacked harness, especially since in 1545 increasing numbers of well-equipped foreign mercenaries were recruited to Henry's cause. Men lacking harness would seem to have been the obvious choice to garrison Henry's new fortresses along Britain's south coast, especially in the circumstances described in the preceding paragraph.

Pennants

A possible clue to the identity of any Oxfordshire captains serving at Portsmouth was lost with the fire at Cowdray in 1793, the seat of Anthony Browne, Viscount Montague, a descendant of Henry VIII's Master of the Horse. This fire destroyed a painting six foot in length depicting in colour Henry's camp at Portsmouth and showing the forces awaiting embarkation in 1545. 'All the tents and pavilions [were] painted, some blue and white and others red and yellow, and the principal of them surmounted by vanes, charged with either arms or badges of the respective commanders to whom they severally appertained.'⁶³ Some thirty-seven pennants were shown but since no reproduction in colour survives, any attempts at identification of Oxfordshire arms would lack certitude.

8. The fate of the mustered

The Mary Rose

On 9 June 1545 Dasent chronicles an order that may have led to tragedy for the county in that one hundred Oxfordshire men were appointed to go to sea with Sir George Carew.⁶⁴ King Henry's entire Portsmouth fleet was under the command of Vice Admiral Carew when the Mary Rose, carrying Sir George himself, sank, drowning almost all aboard on 19 July. There is no record of the names of those drowned but some of them may have come from Ploughley hundred as it will be seen that William Fermor certifies the muster certificate to 'my Lord Admiral'. Sir John Brome was also recruiting men to serve at sea (see Appendix III).

References in wills

Some four hundred wills have been studied with names of men mustered from places common both to the muster and to the testator's address. In very few is there any reference to the wars. Even where such a reference appears, it may have anticipated events that never happened, and we cannot in any case be sure with precision where or by what cause death took place: thus, William Hyat, who was 'going into the King's wars',⁶⁵ and John Jones, 'if I do decease within this realm'.⁶⁶ Robert King, however, made his will 'being in the king's wars beyond the sea',⁶⁷ and Richard Cooke was a

'soldier in the retinue of Thomas Bridges'.⁶⁸ One survivor who permitted himself a loyal comment was John Parsons, who referred in 1545 to 'the most excellent and victorious Prince Henry.'⁶⁹

Epidemics

A statistical analysis of the above wills by the year of death highlights two known epidemics⁷⁰ with some clarity. The first was the plague of 1544-5, during which years not less than thirty-four mustered men's wills went to probate, whereas the average over ninety years was some five each year. Since the vast majority of these were local wills it seems likely that the testators were afflicted without having left the county. Certainly the risk of a larger proportion of men becoming infected would have been far greater with their massing at a Channel port and, indeed, instructions were issued at Dover on 8 September 1544 that 'footmen shall not tarry there as the infecting of any of them might be dangerous to the army.'⁷¹ Over in Calais it was reported that fifteen or sixteen men were dying each day of disease⁷² and the account of the soldiers returning from Calais and Boulogne in winter 1545 makes grim reading. They were said by a Welsh fellow soldier to be 'dying along the road from Dover to London and thence from London to every quarter of the kingdom, while trying to reach home. After they had come home, those who were well fell sick and those who were sick got worse. From this sickness, feebleness and pest they died in every part of England, mostly the people who had been in the camp at Montreuil [Pas-de-Calais], among whom both before and after there was the greatest pest there ever was among people'.⁷³

Nevertheless, it would seem that a national epidemic of 'burning fevers' in the summers followed by 'quartan agues' in the winters of 1556-60⁷⁴ afflicted those on the rolls the worst. In that period wills were proved for 115 of the mustered men, no less than 25 per cent of all wills found, the greatest toll of life appearing to have taken place in the summer months. Indeed, by the Elizabethan muster of 1569, the lists for ten places had been reduced by 52 per cent. In Strype's words, 'so many husbandmen and labourers also died and were sick, that in harvest time in divers places, men would have given [away] one acre of corn to reap and carry in another', further, 'if the people of the realm had been divided into four parts, certainly three parts of those four should have been found sick'.⁷⁵ However, in spite of such mortal perils, the evidence seems to suggest that many of those enrolled survived the exigencies of King Henry's campaigns. For, considering the total number of 1,499 names available to us, it has been possible to find over 450 of the same name (30 per cent) who either made wills in the same parish or for whom there is secondary evidence following 1545; they are referenced in the transcribed lists. The rolls have not been checked against all available Oxfordshire parish registers, which might well add considerably to the evidence of survival.

9. Pay, uniform, arms and armour

Pay

Officers and men all received the statutory six pence per day⁷⁶ although senior officers such as Sir Thomas Bridges were paid eight pence on occasion.⁷⁷ Levies also received one groat as drink money for every five miles they marched.

Uniforms

It does not seem to have been the practice for Oxfordshire levies to be issued with uniforms. However, that may not always have been the case for in 1545 the Privy Council allowed four shillings each for the 'coats' of the mustered in neighbouring Gloucestershire. In contrast, those mustered in the city of London were issued with white smocks or shirts emblazoned front and back with a red cross, as worn by English soldiers at Landrecies in 1543. The other possibility was for uniforms to be issued on arrival at camp when, as with the Duke of Suffolk's contingent at Boulogne in 1545-6, all were dressed in red and yellow coats, caps and hose,⁷⁸ possibly supplied by a continental outfitter.

Arms and armour

Under the Archery Act of 1512 referred to above, such arms, armour or harness as were a man's own property were to be kept in his own home. However, at the discretion of the commissioners a limited armoury was kept by the parish authority under lock and key, theoretically available for use at an hour's notice. In effect, the constables or churchwardens utilised the parish church chest for lack of any alternative. Hence we find in 1542 an entry in the Court Books of the Borough of Witney: 'Delivered to Wm. Byrde and John Bally two pairs of harness for the town with gorgets.'⁷⁹ Harness was body armour. This could extend to jack, splints, gorget and sallet, depending on local funds and custom and, indeed, the ability of the person describing it. The jack protected the upper body and consisted of a sleeveless tunic usually quilted with leather. In 1569 the jack with 'gaddes' referred to the sharp iron spikes built into it, which could serve for both offence and defence in close contact. If not worn as a foundation for metal armour it could also be reinforced with pieces of flat metal. A pair of splints were plates or strips of overlapping metal to protect the arms and elbows. A gorget was a piece of armour to protect the neck and throat on all sides and the sallet was a light steel or leather helmet enclosing the head, although footsoldiers usually left the face exposed. Thus in 1548 we find the Marston churchwardens accounting for 'a pair of harness' kept in their chest at a value of nine shillings.⁸⁰

The shortage of harness in Oxfordshire was nowhere better recited than in the musters for Ploughley where well over one hundred men lacked equipment.

Almain rivet

This exceptional piece of armour, valued at £8, will be seen entered against a three-man group in Temple Cowley headed by Stephen Pike, the constable. Originally a kind of light armour developed in Germany, it incorporated overlapping plates sliding on rivets to provide increased flexibility. There are however at least three widely different definitions, apparently resulting from differences in date, context and the observer. A similarly described piece of armour was found some forty years later in the possession of John Clyfton of Hook Norton, when the inventory was taken at his decease.⁸¹

Bill

A bill was a brown or black pike with a long handle and a spear head which could have a hook or spike at right angles to the head used to drag a man off his horse. Sometimes on the reverse side to the hook was a concave blade, enabling billmen to hew off enemy pike heads. In his will of 1544 John Jones of Burford left his 'best bills' to his sons.⁸²

Corselet with lance

The term can relate to both a mounted and dismounted man but he was invariably armoured with back and breast plates and probably other unspecified pieces. He was armed with a heavy shock-delivering lance.

Demi-lance

This was either a fully armoured lancer on an unarmoured horse or a unit of two men, the 'lancer' and his 'servant', usually a mounted archer or billman. The weapon itself was modified from a tilting lance to a shorter length, thereby being less unwieldy for close quarter cavalry work while nevertheless keeping the opposition at a distance.

Firearms

It will be seen that no mention of handguns appears anywhere in the 1539-42 musters and they were indeed forbidden at this period to any possessed of less than £100 income yearly in lands and offices.⁸³ Nevertheless, a few of those mustered were wealthy enough to have them, such as the richest man in Burford, John Jones, who in his will left one to each of his sons but in the muster appears himself to be enrolled as a billman.

Harquebus

A firearm of variable length, shape, size and calibre. It shot a lead ball fired by exploding blackpowder, which in turn was ignited by a flint striking a snaphaunce lock.

Javelin

At this period probably a spear carried by a horseman, as opposed to a shaped lance.

Longbow

Of the total muster force, not less than 416 men (28 per cent) were levied as archers, to be equipped with the longbow. It is only in fairly recent times that this weapon, as a warbow, has been rediscovered as by no means the modest-sized weapon of popular romance. No longbows of Henry's reign had survived in Oxfordshire and none with certainty anywhere else in England until some 140 staves were recently salvaged from the wreck of the Mary Rose. Since there is reason to believe that Oxfordshire men may have been aboard, a few words about such longbows may have their place here. All the staves were cut from yew trees and averaged 6 ft. 6 in. in length although some were nearer 7 ft.⁸⁴ The staves at least were, therefore, taller than the men for which they were cut. The length of the longbow is demonstrated in the cover illustration to this volume, where other features of the contemporary dress and armour of the bowmen are depicted.

It should however be realised that, in later years, foreign yew was found preferable to the English variety for making bows and as far as the Oxfordshire musters were concerned there would often have been easier access to elm, witch or ash. Moreover, of all the wills in the Oxford probate records for the period there are no bowyers and only two fletchers, so that many men, at least in an emergency, may have had to make their own bows. These would normally have been fashioned to be the same height as the user. The shooting distance with such bows would then have depended on skill, fitness, relative prominence of the shooting position, the weight of the equipment and other factors such as wind and humidity.

Henry VIII's campaign experience, reinforcing his attachment to the long tradition of British archery, led him, as early as his aforementioned Act of 1512, to direct that every father should provide a bow and two arrows for his son 'when he shall be seven years old.' The price of yew longbows, fixed by Act of Parliament in 1542 at 3s.4d., was considerably below the market price.⁸⁵ Even so, 3s.4d. was a very large sum for many villagers. Although the Act of 1542 was confirmed in later years, in 1595 Guy Rigby's notched bow was valued in his inventory at 6s. 8d.⁸⁶ Throughout much of his reign Henry made it compulsory for all households to keep bows and arrows, to share them in shooting practice, under penalty of a fine if found without them. Moreover, from 1512 all men or their servants (except clergy, judges, the lame, decrepit, or maimed) were obliged to practise regularly.⁸⁷ It is of passing interest that Oxfordshire remained one of the last two counties to retain the longbow as its main artillery, where it was still in preponderance in 1588.⁸⁸ In a county apparently unremarkable for its expenditure on military equipment, this is perhaps not surprising. However, the influence of Henry's proclamation banning the use of hand-guns and crossbows in hunting⁸⁹, in a county where he and his lieutenants were active in the sport, can only be surmised.

Arrows

From the large numbers recently salvaged from the Mary Rose it is known that the shafts were made variously of poplar, ash, hazel, or beech, and were usually about 30 in. in length.⁹⁰ For warfare they would have been fitted with goose or swan feather flights with a horn knock and tipped with different types of steel heads. They could also, as the need arose, be tipped with an incendiary substance so that given their range and trajectory, their capacity for penetrating wooden decks, the sides of ships, and even armour, or for the firing of enemy sails at a distance, was considerable. In 1561 a sheaf of arrows at Marston was valued at 5s.⁹¹

Butts

Under the Archery Act of 1512 every village green was a potential training ground for archers. Holy days were named as suitable for practice and butts were required to be erected. Though manorial courts were required to maintain the butts, many did not and an Act of 1541 bemoaned 'that divers gentlemen, yeomen, and serving men now of late have laid apart the good and laudable exercise of the longbow, which always heretofore has been the surety, safeguard and confirmed defence of this realm'.⁹² Such practice was not without its hazards, especially when the Act went on to lay down that no man who had reached twenty-four years might shoot at a mark less than 220 yards distant.⁹³ The records for Oxfordshire show that at least three men were killed by longbows in practice in subsequent years, one each in Bampton, Chadlington, and Wootton hundreds.⁹⁴ Proper butt discipline must have been difficult to enforce under the new law, but the use of the formidable war bows could only be mastered by continuous practice. Curiously, as we have seen, only one bow appears in the inventories for those mustered, but with rough and regular use not to mention loss in war service, the natural life of such bows probably did not exceed a year.

10. The muster roll of 1569

Queen Elizabeth's government took conspicuous care to put the internal defence of the realm in a complete state of efficiency. General musters were held approximately every three years, even though there may not have been a specific emergency in the south. Such was the case in March 1569 when the lists were compiled for the whole of Oxfordshire (including Ewelme half-hundred and Henley town), thus enabling the presentment of a muster certificate offering no less than 2,074 men. This figure virtually tallies with the total number of names discernible for the county (2,073), although the total names for five of the hundreds differed slightly from the pattern indicated in the weaponry table.

The most men were listed from the same five hundreds as in Henry's musters with the exception that Henley Town replaced Bampton as the fifth biggest provider. With firearms now featuring in the muster certificate, Henley also supplied the mostarquebusiers, whereas on this occasion Wootton found more pike-, bill-, and bowmen than any other hundred. As well as these four weaponry divisions, totals were given for three categories of quality; the 'choice', second and the third 'sort', but once again without definition. The muster lists, unlike the Henrician lists discussed above, make no mention of towns, villages, or valuations. About a score of entries inscribed on the folds and bases of the vellum sheets were badly faded but nevertheless yielded names for which there is some confidence following study by ultra-violet light. Sadly, even this aid could not help in certain parts of the certificate itself, which, as it was the top sheet, had become chafed and blackened.

The Elizabethan muster certificates also contained reference to totals of 'light horsemen' and 'mares'. Horses were now much needed by officers but there was then a great shortage in England. These two categories had not been listed in the certificates of 1539 or 1542, even though Henry had instigated the passing of a Statute in 1537 (27 Hen. VIII c.6.) called 'An Act concerning the breeding of horses' (confirmed by an Elizabethan proclamation in identical terms in 1562). In this act the decline of horse breeding for defence was deplored, with 'good, swift and strong horses' having been replaced by 'small nags and mares' throughout the realm. Thus, from 1 May 1537 everyone who owned, farmed or was entitled to any fenced park in which deer were kept for sport and which were of 'one mile in compass' had to keep two mares of at least thirteen hands stature or be fined 40s. per month if in default. In parks of four miles, four mares were required to be pastured and they were not permitted to be covered by horses of less than fourteen hands. That is the reason why the findings for several Oxfordshire parks appear, barely legible, at the foot of the Oxfordshire muster certificate.

The submission of these muster returns was delayed until September with Sir Richard Fiennes and the other commissioners giving the harvest as their reason. At the same time they gave their opinions at considerable length as regards training and the increase of the harquebus division.

APPENDIX I

The Commissioners of Array, 1539

Oxfordshire's hundreds were divided between specific teams of Commissioners of Array who were responsible for the musters and certificates in each.⁹⁵ However muster returns have not so far been discovered for more than five hundreds, and it is possible that they were not taken in the others between 1539 and 1542.

APPENDIX II

The leading contributors

The following Oxfordshire notables with their contributions in men, arms and armour, are listed in the Duke of Suffolk's section of Henry VIII's campaign plan against France in 1544. They all appear in P.R.O. SP 1/184, where they were evidently removed from a muster book. The contributions from certain named individuals are not given. Figures have been arabicised and punctuation inserted to improve clarity.

Sir William Barentyne 30 footmen

Anthony Cope 12 footmen

Edward Fynes 12 footmen

[Five of the names listed above make contributions of men in later parts of the plan but only very small numbers are stated without any explanation. It is possible that these latter numbers were already included in the above list. If demi-lances are counted as a contribution of two (i.e. 'lancer' and 'servant'), the above force represents a total strength of just over 600 men.]

Notes on the leading contributors listed above.

Sir John Williams, later Lord Williams of Thame, bought the manors of Great and Little Rycote in 1538 and was given the estates of Wytham and Weston on the Green. Amongst other offices he was at one time Master of the King's Jewel House and later Treasurer of the Court of Augmentations. In this latter capacity, significant sums of money, including funds for the conduct of Henry's war, passed through his office. Henry granted him a patent 'to retain ten gentlemen and yeomen' in livery blazoned with his own badge. When he died his armour and horses were left to the Earl of Bedford. His alabaster tomb is in St Mary's Church, Thame.

Sir William Barentyne, a Sheriff of Oxfordshire and Berkshire for several years, was related to others in the above list. His gauntlets, his shield emblazoned with his arms and a replica of his helm are preserved at Great Haseley church, where he is buried. See the frontispiece to this volume.

The reference to Thomas Briggs almost certainly refers to Sir Thomas Bridges, who is mentioned a number of times in accounts of overseas missions carried out for Henry, mainly of a military or diplomatic nature. Among his titles were those of Ranger of Wychwood and Keeper of Langley and Cornbury Park, where he lived. He became Lieutenant of the Tower of London. In 1548 he was steward of Chadlington hundred and the royal manors of Burford and Minster Lovell. He is buried at Charlbury.

Leonard Chamberlain was steward of the manor of Woodstock. He was also a Commissioner for Gaol Delivery, as were John Denton and Sir George Darcy. The latter, who bought Eynsham Abbey and had interests in lands in Finstock, North Leigh, Wilcote and Charlbury, also had important property in Yorkshire, where he had been Sheriff.

Sir Walter Stonor, like Sir George, was on personal terms with Henry's Chief Minister, Thomas Cromwell. The Stonor family had been established in Oxfordshire for many generations, Stonor Park being in Pirton hundred. Sir Walter was for a time a Sheriff of Oxfordshire and Berkshire and J.P. for Henley. Like Lord Williams and Sir William Barentyne, he was one of those appointed to assess a contribution to be given by the king's subjects of the county towards their defence against the French king in 1546.

Those requiring more detailed information are referred to the Letters and Papers of Henry VIII, Foreign and Domestic, the more recent volumes of the Victoria County History of Oxfordshire, and J. Dunkin's History and Antiquities of the Hundreds of Bullingdon and Ploughley.

APPENDIX III

Oxford town's soldiers, armour and weapons.

The first mention of Oxford city is made in a complaint from Sir John Brome of Holton, Commissioner for Array, to Henry's chief minister in April 1539, about the same time that the Bullingdon muster took place. Sir John complained that the mayor and aldermen of Oxford were mustering men just outside the north gate, which had prevented him from meeting a demand in the King's name to raise able men. Nothing is noted in the city's archives until 30 May 1544. That day the decision was minuted that Alderman Fryer and Alderman Pye (two former mayors) should discuss with a Master Carter the despatch of 'certain persons' to the King's wars under the Duke of Suffolk and that the town would be bound by any decisions made. If anyone refused to co-operate, the mayor was given authority to put them under guard until such time as they agreed. And on 17 June they were discussing 'setting them forward' but we hear no more.

Only in 1548 were William Spencer, Richard Whittington, Thomas Mallison and Thomas Williams empowered to keep custody of various arms and armour 'to be in readiness at all time if need require to set forward the town soldiers', apparently a force of some twenty men. In 1558 fourteen city parishes delivered arms and armour to the town hall, presumably returning material issued to them. Evidently the stock was considered inadequate, for in the same year '£3.4s.8d. for the relief of Calais' was diverted to buy more armour. The parishes of St. Mary Magdalen, St. Peter-in-the-East, St. Martin, and St. Aldate contributed the most.

Pp. 43-5 include the names of thirteen Oxford soldiers sent to Dover in 1523, with details of their equipment and expenses. Turner's selections for later reigns make no mention of musters, but there is one reference to payment for a drummer in 1580: ibid. p.411.

APPENDIX IV

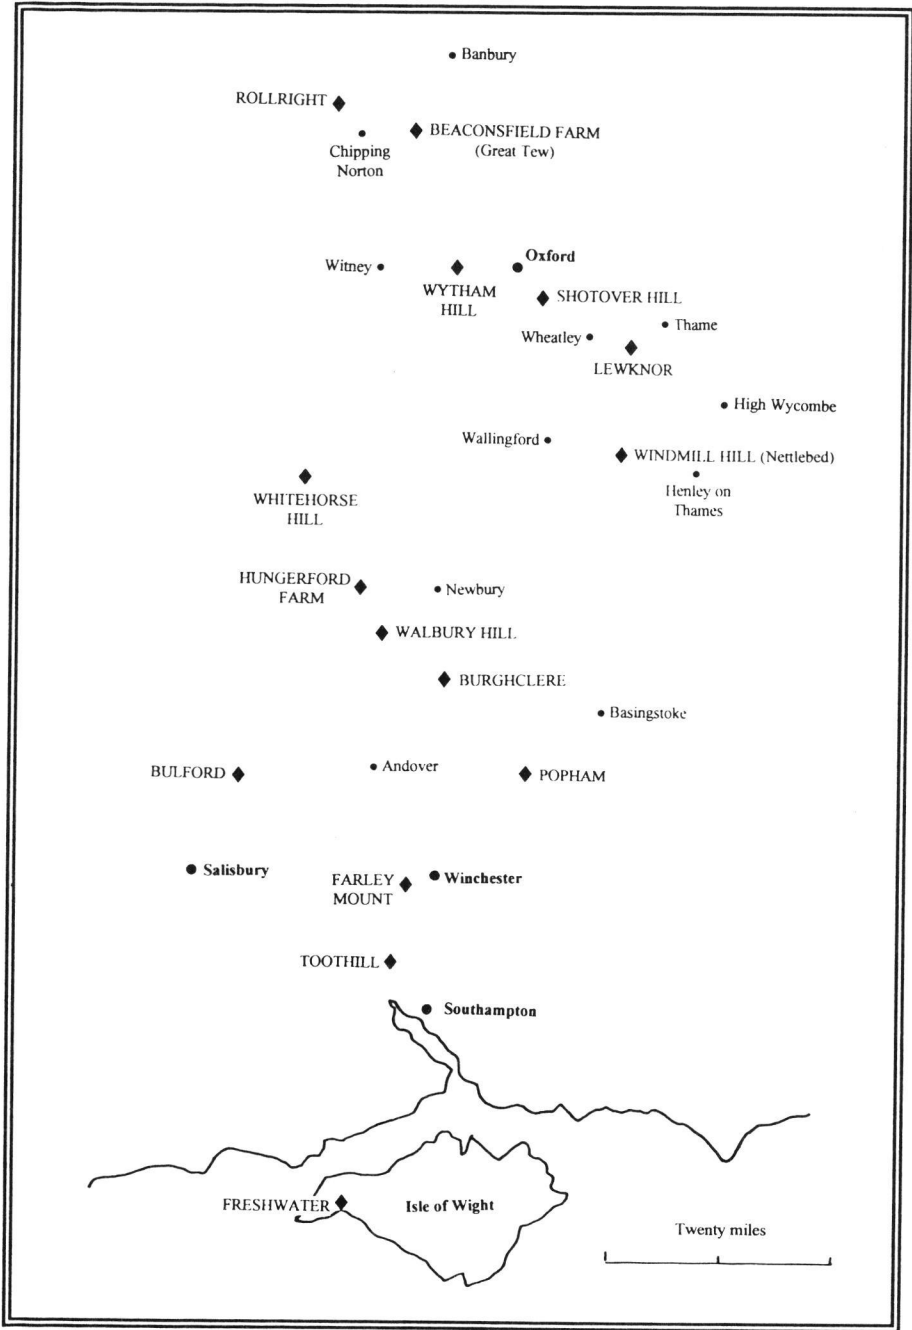

The beacons that summoned Oxfordshire in 1545

The accompanying map illustrates the likely chain of beacons, from the Isle of Wight to Oxfordshire. In theory, the beacon warning system was intended to cross the country with the speed of light but it was reliant on clear weather during the summer 'campaign' season of the sixteenth century and would have been inoperable without the support of messengers on horseback. The warning pattern varied from place to place but a typical arrangement was to build on hilltops triple beacons at key points near the coast, dual beacons at points just inland, and single beacons at all points further from the sea. They were manned continuously from March to October and the coastal signals could be varied to indicate the strength of the enemy and the degree of urgency. But the shortcomings of the system could lead to many false alarms, such as those that irritated Oxfordshire people in 1545. An incorrect flame was enough to keep bands of men out all night. Accounts suggest that many false alarms were raised by wrongly identifying peaceful merchant ships in the Channel, by bonfires, or by farmers burning stubble, quite apart from idle or malicious hoaxers.

It seems most likely that at the end of July 1545 the beacon chain would have been almost due north, as indicated below.

Several beacons were sited just beyond the Oxfordshire county boundary. They included, in Berkshire, Beacon (Youlbury) Hill, Cumnor, and St. Helen's church, Abingdon; in the fifteenth century St. Helen's seems only to have had a watchkeeper in the belfry. Beacons at Pounden and Muswell Hill, both in Buckinghamshire, would have been visible in the neighbouring Oxfordshire parishes of Stratton Audley and Piddington.⁹⁷

97. The map is a composite of findings from various sources including H.T. White, The Beacon System in Hampshire (Proc. Hants. Field Club x (3), 1930), pp. 252-278; Sir A. Evans, 'England's Beacon Chain', The Times, 18 Apr. 1935; V.C.H. Oxon. iv, p. 335; ibid. viii, p. 16; O. S. Gazetteer, Map of Ancient Britain.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Editorial additions are in square brackets.

Years and dates have been modernized.

Marginal details have been reproduced as written, and justified margins kept or inserted for the sake of clarity.

Numerals have been arabicized.

The incorporation of certain lay subsidy assessments against the names in four of the muster rolls has been mentioned under Valuations. The assessments for 1543 were chosen because those for other years, while in certain cases closer to the year of muster, were either fragmentary, otherwise damaged, or incomplete. Persons were assessed on goods or on land, whichever was the more valuable. Those with £1-£5 in goods paid 4d. in the pound, those with £5-£10 paid 8d., and those with £10-£20 paid 16d. Above £20, 2s. in the pound was paid. Those with £1-£5 in land paid 8d., those with £5-£10 paid 16d., those with £10-£20 paid 2s., and those with £20 or above paid 3s. All assessments shown in square brackets were made against a valuation for 'goods and cattle', except in a few cases where specified as 'in lands'. In one or two cases those assessments were detailed in pounds, shillings, and pence.

Wills or other secondary evidence of survival beyond 1542 have been referenced against the list of names where the theoretical life span of a mustered sixteen-year-old might possibly have extended into the seventeenth century. In this event, unavoidable ambiguity may arise where successive fathers and sons bore the same Christian name, as was frequently the case. Where this happens it is often impossible to distinguish the generations, but even so it is hoped that the information may prove of interest. Similar evidence has not been sought for the names in 1569 muster lists, where some of the same conscripts (or perhaps their sons or grandsons) may reappear.

References to the Oxfordshire Archives class MSS. Wills Oxon. are here abbreviated to WO, followed by the piece or volume number. All other wills are to be found at the Public Record Office in the class PROB 11. The existence of a letter of administration, bond, inventory, or account is noted, as is the year, and, if given, the occupation.

INDEX OF PLACES

Places in Oxfordshire (pre-1974) are listed first, with the mother parishes of chapelries, hamlets etc. shown in brackets, and a cross reference under such parishes. Places in other counties (pre-1974) follow. Thus, places now in Oxfordshire but formerly in Berkshire will be found under Berkshire.

Other Societies publishing records relating to Oxfordshire

OXFORD HISTORICAL SOCIETY

This Society, founded in 1884, exists to publish historical records of the University and City of Oxford.

Applications for membership and list of publications should be sent to Robert Peberdy (Hon. Treasurer), 38 Randolph Street, Oxford OX4 1XZ. Most volumes are still in print and available to non-members.

OXFORDSHIRE ARCHITECTURAL AND HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Society, formed in 1972 by the amalgamation of the Oxford Architectural and Historical Society (founded in 1839) and the Oxfordshire (formerly North Oxfordshire) Archaeological Society (founded in 1852), exists to further the study of the archaeology, architecture and history of Oxford and Oxfordshire. It publishes Oxoniensia and provides a full programme of meetings and excursions.

Subscriptions (£12 including Oxoniensia, £5 without the journal) should be sent to the Hon. Assistant Treasurer at the Centre for Oxfordshire Studies, Oxford Central Library, Westgate, Oxford OX1 1DJ, who will be pleased to supply further information about the Society.

OXFORDSHIRE FAMILY HISTORY SOCIETY

The Society was formed in 1976 and is now the largest historical society in the county, with well over a thousand members. It seeks to serve both those with Oxfordshire ancestors and those now living in the county but with ancestors elsewhere. It publishes The Oxfordshire Family Historian three times a year and in addition booklets and microfiche providing information relating to Oxfordshire people and families as well as indexes to such records.

The subscription is £9 a year; further information is available from the Hon. Secretary, c/o Oxfordshire Archives, County Hall, New Rd, Oxford OX1 1ND.

OXFORDSHIRE LOCAL HISTORY ASSOCIATION

The Association seeks to bring together the many historical societies in the county, however large or small their area of interest. There is a twice-yearly journal, Oxfordshire Local History, and at least two meetings a year.

The annual subscription is £7, payable to the Hon. Treasurer, Mr B. Woods, 110 Evans Lane, Kidlington, Oxon. OX5 2JB.

BANBURY HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Society was founded in 1957 and promotes the history of the Banbury area, both north Oxfordshire and the adjacent parts of Northamptonshire and Warwickshire. A journal, Cake & Cockhorse, is published three times a year, and a records series has produced regular volumes.

The Subscription is £10 per annum; details of membership and publications still in print are available from Banbury Museum, 8 Horsefair, Banbury OX16 0AA.
